Molecular Approaches to Improving Food Quality and Safety Deepak Bhatnagar, 2012-12-06 Conventional food safety and quality research have traditionally dealt with the whole organism or food product either plant or animal or with the microorganisms that associate with these food producing plants and animals at various stages of growth development and maturation. However conventional research methods no longer are sufficient to bring about the improvements in quality and safety of foods that are demanded in today's marketplace by increasingly educated and sophisticated consumers. Improved quality has generally been thought to mean 1 unblemished products particularly fruits and vegetables and 2 the desired functionality of protein carbohydrates and fats in grain oilseeds and the like to achieve the intended purpose in processing foods for example dough characteristics to make bread or pasta. However it also means the year round ready availability of nutritious and appealing choices in all food groups that can be quickly and easily prepared. This promotes optimum nutrition particularly necessary in children the elderly and special needs groups and it allows health conscious consumers to match their calorie intake with individual needs to achieve and maintain desirable body weight.
