languages remained the only languages taught in schools. These languages were often taught by poorly trained teachers who passed their errors on to students. Major policy revisions and modifications in language education teacher training and textbook and examination writing are changing the situation. These educational and language policy shifts are examined in seven anglophone and francophone countries in western, central and eastern Africa including Senegal, The Gambia, Liberia, Gabon, Rwanda, Burundi and Kenya. Changes in these countries are seen as indicative of general trends in other African nations. The study examines each of the seven countries basic cultural and linguistic compositions, present school systems and policies regarding indigenous and foreign languages, teacher training and professional preparation, textbook preparation and use, the use of broadcasting to teach language and adult functional literacy programs. Educational reforms and changes common to all seven countries are examined and their common educational needs and priorities are discussed.

Computers in Music Education Andrew R. Brown, 2007
Computers in Music Education addresses the question of how computer technologies might best assist music education. For current and preservice music teachers and designed as a development tool, reference resource and basic teaching text, it addresses pedagogical issues and the use of computers to aid production and presentation of students' musical works. Written by a music educator and digital media specialist, it cuts through the jargon to present a concise, easy to digest overview of the field, covering notation software, MIDI sound creation, downloading music, posting personal MP3s for mass distribution. While there are many more technical books, few offer a comprehensive, understandable overview of the field. Computers in Music Education is an important text for the growing number of courses in this area.
