

Directions answering the discussion questions in 150 words each and responses in 100 words.

Discussion 1: For students to be college and career ready, they must develop higher-order thinking skills. Discuss some strategies a teacher can use to promote higher-order thinking in the secondary classroom while being cognizant of the varying levels of student understanding.

Response 1:

Allecia wrote: In order for students to be college and/or career ready, they must develop higher order thinking skills in school. Higher order thinking skills go well beyond surface level learning and rote memorization. Rather, these skills require doing something with facts presented: question them, infer from them, reflect upon them, categorize them, manipulate them, connect them, apply them in new situations, and more. Higher order thinking skills are teachable and can be improved upon with practice. This skill can be differentiated in order to meet students at a wide range of skill levels and abilities. Educators can use various strategies to teach and instill higher order thinking skills. Sharing with students what higher order thinking is in the first place, and why these skills are important is a good starting point. Showing and teaching students how to connect ideas and concepts as well as comparing the new to the already known helps students see the bigger picture.

Additionally, encouraging and thoughtfully responding to divergent questions from students reinforces and promotes critical thinking, curiosity, and exploration (Thomas, 2009). In my own classroom (high school visual arts), higher order thinking is taught and promoted daily through group discussions, posing thoughtful questions about artist's work, as well as through creative problem solving. I'm curious - across the different content areas, how do my classmate's incorporate higher order learning?

New Directions in Question Answering Mark T. Maybury, 2004 Major trends in the development of an important new method of information access that combines elements of natural language processing, information retrieval and human computer interaction. Question answering systems which provide natural language responses to natural language queries are the subject of rapidly advancing research encompassing both academic study and commercial applications, the most well known of which is the search engine Ask Jeeves. Question answering draws on different fields and technologies including natural language processing, information retrieval, explanation generation and human computer interaction. Question answering creates an important new method of information access and can be seen as the natural step beyond such standard Web search methods as keyword query and document retrieval. This collection charts significant new directions in the field including temporal, spatial, definitional, biographical, multimedia and multilingual question answering. After an introduction that defines essential terminology and provides a roadmap to future trends, the book covers key areas of research and development. These include current methods, architecture, requirements and the history of question answering on the Web, the development of systems to address new types of questions, interactivity which is often required for clarification of questions or answers, reuse of answers, advanced methods and knowledge representation and reasoning used to support question answering. Each section contains an introduction that summarizes the chapters included and places them in context, relating them to the other chapters in the book as well as to the existing literature in the field and assessing the problems and challenges that remain.
