With the publication of this book, the authors left an unforgettable mark on the Arab cinema scholarship. The book assembles an emotional florilegium of film titles, filmmakers, producers, script pens, and actors who have shaped the film of the Arab world since the early 20th century. More specifically, they contextualize a wealth of archival film work by probing the intricate political and social currents, within and outside of the Arab world, that informed the flicks, narratives, and art. Moreover, they also elaborate on themes that are inclusively espoused by Arab filmmakers and that distinguish artists from one another across geographical and cultural boundaries.

From colonialism to Marxism, religion to language, diversity to censorship, and representation of local minorities to working as minorities in diaspora, authors describe the richly contentious and creative environment that produced the films. The book is divided into different major parts, starting with an introduction that primarily aims to deconstruct a notion of the Arab world as a cultural monolith. The authors set the intention of dispelling the narrative of the Third World as a peripheral space in relation to the central location, physically and culturally, of the Eurocentric First World. The ramifications stemming from this distinction on the Arab film industries are revisited throughout the book. Authors go back in time through the history of Arab Cinemas, which started in 1895 when two German filmmakers, the Skladanowsky Brothers, first screened their films in Berlin and later, Lumiere Bros in the United States. Berlin and French-controlled territories of the West-Arab lived under far harsher conditions of forced acculturation, hindering, and further delaying native film production considerably.

Moreover, authors present filmmaking as a historical weapon of resistance across the Arab universe, although in alternative ways. Under the socialist regimes, Arab cinemas produced politically and religiously committed Arab-fiction films, with Western-modeled heroes carrying the narratives of colonially oppressed peoples. With the tag of tightening state censorship, directors either found creative ways of manipulating legal boundaries to convey transgressive messages or, in exile due to oppression or civil war, used the creative freedom that comes with economic co-productions with Western artists and institutions. Leading up to the 1990s, further film critiques of nationalism allowed for increasing representations of marginalized ethnic and religious minorities.

Authors also revisit film history from an mistic perspective. They attempt to address why films survived the dominant Islamic interpretation of prohibiting the visual arts, with their Islamic Sharī'ah explanations and actual outlook of Muslim scholars. The book also uncards in vivid details the impacts of classic literature and contemporary theater on the evolution of Imagined Histories Anthony Molho, Gordon S. Wood, 2018-06-05 This collection of essays by twenty one distinguished American historians reflects on a peculiarly American way of imagining the past. At a time when history writing has changed dramatically the authors discuss the birth and evolution of historiography in this country from its origins in the late nineteenth century through its present more cosmopolitan character. In the book's first part concerning recent historiography are chapters on exceptionalism, gender, economic history, social theory, race and immigration and multiculturalism. Authors are Daniel Rodgers, Linda Kerber, Naomi Lamoreaux, Dorothy Ross, Thomas Holt and Philip Gleason. The three American centuries are discussed in the second part with chapters by Gordon Wood, George Fredrickson and James Patterson. The third part is a chronological survey of non-American histories including that of Western civilization, ancient history, the middle ages, early modern and modern Europe, Russia and Asia. Contributors are Eugen Weber, Richard Saller, Gabrielle Spiegel, Anthony Molho, Philip Benedict, Richard Kagan, Keith Baker, Joseph Zizak, Volker Berghahn, Charles Maier, Martin Malia and Carol Gluck. Together these scholars reveal the unique perspective American historians have brought to the past of their own nation as well as that of the world. Formerly writing from a conviction that America had a singular destiny, American historians have gradually come to share viewpoints of historians in other countries about which they write. The result is the virtual disappearance of what was a distinctive American voice. That voice is the subject of this book.

Starting with the earliest references in Egyptian and Assyrian texts, Nur Masalha explores how Palestine and its Palestinian identity have evolved over thousands of years from the Bronze Age to the present day. Drawing on a rich body of sources and the latest archaeological evidence, Masalha shows how Palestine's multicultural past has been distorted and mythologised by Biblical lore and the Israel-Palestinian conflict. In the process, Masalha reveals that the concept of Palestine, contrary to accepted belief, is not a modern invention or one constructed in opposition to Israel but rooted firmly in ancient past Palestine.
