Park City:

Battery Park City Charles J. Urstadt, Charles J. Urstadt with Gene Brown, 2005 Battery Park City is a special place and superlatives have come easily to those who have written about it. It is one of the most significant new towns ever built in America constructed by private developers on landfill with an infrastructure financed by the sale of bonds by a state created public benefit corporation. Its successful mix of attractive office and residential buildings has been the major contributor to the revitalization of New York City's downtown. It's also paid off literally. The Battery Park City Authority, the public benefit corporation that was the driving force behind the entire development, is in the black and indeed generates more than 100 million a year in profit without the City or State having a cent invested in the venture. The development is even rich culturally. It's bookended on its south end by The Museum of Jewish Heritage which has the most important collection memorializing the Holocaust outside of Washington D.C.'s Holocaust Museum and on the north by the new home of Stuyvesant High School which most years sends more graduates to Harvard than any other high school in America. Amidst parks, sculpture and apartments providing homes for almost 10,000 people, most of whom walk to work stands the New York Mercantile Exchange and the imposing World Financial Center. Within the shouting distance of young children on scooters and adolescents on skateboards are long town cars waiting to whisk executives to their next appointment. But if anything truly merits superlatives it's the public amenities that grace this city extending out into the water from lower Manhattan. On a summer Sunday its long and graceful esplanade hosts thousands of bikers, hikers and people out for a stroll along the Hudson River. The area is thronged at lunchtime. And after work on any pleasant afternoon, Battery Park City's yacht cove is ringed with workers unwinding after a busy day and its harbor side restaurants are crowded with diners enjoying the spectacular view. The city's financial powerhouses charter yachts with names such as Royal Princess and Excalibur anchored in the cove for business promoting cocktail and dinner parties. But you don't have to be rich and powerful to enjoy what the development has to offer. The indoor concerts under the high arching crystal vault filled with palm trees and bright flowers part of the World Financial Center just behind the cove are free and open to the public. Signs on the esplanade caution bikers and skaters to Yield to Pedestrians. But one of the marvels of Battery Park City is that the whole development actually does that. Here in the heart of Manhattan on the island that the automobile long ago conquered the public spaces have been planned for people on foot. The spaces are broad and open the streets just wide enough to provide necessary vehicular access. Already although building continues on its several empty lots, Battery Park City has become one of New York City's landmarks attracting foreign visitors as well as tourists from around America as one of Gotham's must see sights. As with any landmark it now seems to own the space it occupies. Despite the evident newness of everything in the development its component parts are beginning to take on an air of inevitability. But the truth is that there was nothing inevitable about the development of Battery Park City. Every element of it was a battleground over which politicians and planners fought. In fact this marvelous and extremely valuable asset to America's greatest city might just as easily have remained under water. That's the point of this book. There's something deceptively inevitable about land, steel and concrete. With the passage of time, it becomes harder and harder to imagine that the land wasn't there. Revised Ordinances of Park City Together with that Portion of the Revised Statutes Relating to Cities and Towns Park City (Utah), 1906* Park City Dalton Gackle, 2022. Settled by miners and Mormons after the Civil War and incorporated in 1884, Park City grew into one of the world's most prestigious mining camps. Known primarily for its richness in silver, Park City miners also extracted lead, zinc, gold and copper from the surrounding hills. With the town and its mines located at over 7,000 feet above sea level, miners faced brutal winters to unleash treasure for the nation. As the mines grew so too did the town, attracting businesspeople, grocers, doctors, lawyers, teachers and more to the area. In addition to miners and prospectors seeking to strike it rich, while most miners faced tough lives and died young, some did create legacies beyond their wildest dreams. Park City made many a millionaire, including David Keith, Thomas Kearns, R.C. Chambers, John Judge, John Daly and Suzanne Bransford Emery Holmes Delitch Engalitcheff, also known as the Silver Queen. From mines large like the Silver King and the Ontario to small like the Nelson Queen, Park City's early history is that of the triumphs and tragedies of mining, the ebbs and flows of the community and the metals that made it all happen. Dalton Gackle is the research, digital services and social media coordinator at the Park City Museum. Park City, Utah. An American West and pop culture historian by way of the Midwest, Gackle manages the Park City Museum's Hal Compton Research Library.

Park City Becky French Brewer, Douglas Stuart McDaniel, 2005. Park City was incorporated in 1907 as a Tennessee municipality. From its inception in the 1890s, Park City became a melting pot of Greek, Swiss, Jewish, African-American, German, Italian and Scotch-Irish entrepreneurs of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Cal Johnson, a former slave and resident of Park City, became one of the wealthiest men in Tennessee. Johnson invested in race horses, taverns and real estate and he operated a race track in Burlington on the eastern edge of Park City. The half mile track is still intact as a city street known as Speedway Circle. Today, Park City is a virtual museum of Victorian homes designed by mail order architect and Park City resident George F. Barber. The residence he designed and built for himself still stands on Washington Avenue. Other highlights include Park City's pre-Civil War history and important trade expositions of national significance hosted in Park City from 1910 to 1913. In 1917, Park City was annexed into the city of Knoxville, but the community retained its cultural and historical identity for many years around Chilhowee Park. Once a privately owned estate and lake, Chilhowee Park became Park City's social center welcoming such notable figures as Teddy Roosevelt William Jennings Bryan and Louis Armstrong
