Natural Communities:

The Natural Communities of Georgia Leslie Edwards, Jonathan Ambrose, L. Katherine Kirkman, 2013-02-01 The Natural Communities of Georgia presents a comprehensive overview of the state's natural landscapes providing an ecological context to enhance understanding of this region's natural history Georgia boasts an impressive range of natural communities assemblages of interacting species that have either been minimally impacted by modern human activities or have successfully recovered from them This guide makes the case that identifying these distinctive communities and the factors that determine their distribution are central to understanding Georgia's ecological diversity and the steps necessary for its conservation Within Georgia's five major ecoregions the editors identify and describe a total of sixty six natural communities such as the expansive salt marshes of the barrier islands in the Maritime ecoregion the fire driven longleaf pine woodlands of the Coastal Plain the beautiful granite outcrops of the Piedmont the rare prairies of the Ridge and Valley and the diverse coves of the Blue Ridge With contributions from scientists who have managed researched and written about Georgia landscapes for decades the guide features more than four hundred color photographs that reveal the stunning natural beauty and diversity of the state The book also explores conservation issues including rare or declining species current and future threats to specific areas and research needs and provides land management strategies for preserving restoring and maintaining biotic communities The Natural Communities of Georgia is an essential reference for ecologists and other scientists as well as a rich resource for Georgians interested in the region's natural heritage the Natural Communities now in its fourth edition is intended as a reference book describing the state's biodiversity at the community and ecosystem levels. It describes natural patterns of organisms that typically co-occur together in a particular kind of environment. The classification draws on years of use and data collection by North Carolina's Natural Heritage Program, the extensive vegetation plot data of the Carolina Vegetation Survey, and the National Vegetation Classification. The classification units are intended for detailed conservation planning at the natural community level for representing the diversity of ecological function for characterizing the habitats of species and for contributing to the conservation of the myriad species that are too poorly known to track individually. The 343 community subtypes are grouped into types and are nested within 30 broader ecological themes that have been recognized in North Carolina for decades, retaining continuity with previous editions. Material to aid in identification of the communities includes concept statements, dichotomous keys, and descriptions of the distinctions from closely related communities. Extensive descriptions of each community and each theme include sections on physical settings, soils, hydrology, vegetation, range, abundance, and ecological dynamics using scientific nomenclature and terminology. Crosswalks to the National Vegetation Classification and to NatureServe's ecological systems and listings of rare plant and animal species associated with each community provide additional functionality. While technical in style, mostly providing scientific names instead of common names, this book can offer the educated layperson and scientist alike an expanded appreciation of the diversity of natural settings in North Carolina. It is expected to remain a primary reference for years to come. An electronic pdf version of this book is available for download from the North Carolina Natural Heritage Program at <https://www.ncnhp.org>.
