

3-Active construction of a grammar

- This theory claims that children actually invent the rules of grammar themselves.
- Their inventions are based on the speech they hear around them; this is their input or data for analysis.
- Children listen to the language around them and analyze it to determine the patterns that exists. When they think they have discovered a pattern, they hypothesize a rule to account for it. They add this rule to their growing grammar and use it in constructing utterances.
- This theory explains what the imitation and reinforcement theories cannot explain alone. Within this framework children's mistakes are expected to occur and follow nonrandom patterns, because the child is forming utterances according to grammatical rules, although the rules are often different from those adults use.
