Women and Globalization Delia D. Aguilar, Anne E. Lacsamana, 2004-05 Delia D. Aguilar and Anne E. Lacsamana have assembled a collection of articles showing the various ways in which the neoliberal agenda of globalization has drawn women into productive labor and in the process radically reshaped their lives in the reproductive sphere Implemented primarily through the structural adjustment programs required by international financial agencies neoliberalism has intensified women's exploitation on the assembly line and spawned an unprecedented diaspora of women as mail order brides domestic helpers and workers in the sex trade Many of the essays describe the appalling conditions that characterize these work sites Not less important they underscore the vitality of grassroots organizations where women collectively wage battles for better work lives and envision a system more humane than what currently exists
