

NEGOTIATING ACROSS CULTURES (A communication perspective)

Written & Edited by Paul J. Firman, Air Force Negotiation Center

According to the Air Force Culture and Language Center, Cross-Cultural Competence or 3C is defined as "the ability to quickly and accurately comprehend and then act appropriately and effectively in a culturally complex environment." The idea is to achieve a desired effect, without necessarily having prior exposure to a particular group, region, or language.

NOTE: Key summary is the ability to Comprehend, Act, and Achieve a desired effect – without prior exposure!

Lack of awareness can lead to misinterpretation, misunderstanding, and unintentional insult. For example, if you were walking into a negotiation with a Kenyan host and he grabbed your hand as you entered the room, your initial reaction could result in an unintended offense. In today's military environment it is not enough to simply focus on negotiation concepts; one must also consider how culture can impact the negotiation process.

Understanding a Low Context Society

Cultures such as the US and Northern European countries tend to be more on the individualistic or low context side.

Individualistic values: [2]

Have an "I" orientation

Value "truth" over harmony & face

Value task over relationships

The relatively extreme individualistic norm of American mainstream culture is made possible by a relatively high and dependable standard of living that allows self-sufficiency. This self-sufficiency often results in people valuing mastery of certain skills or being able to perform under pressure—by competing with and doing better than others. Personal independence is a virtue and often impacts the way we negotiate. Open debate is valued as a way to meet ones needs.

In a negotiation, low context cultures use direct communication with explicit verbal expressions and use much more factual and background information when speaking. Accuracy, directness, and clarity of speech are valued. Examples of low context cultures include the United States,

Morgan,2006-02-27 Conflict be it war between states ethnic violence civil war or terrorist activity endures despite immense efforts to end it How do states cope with conflict minimize future threats and reduce the risk of insecurity Morgan outlines a spectrum of solutions states use to manage violent conflict ranging from strategies that individual governments enact largely on their own such as distribution of power deterrence or arms control to those such as collective security and multilateralism that are more global in nature The book progresses into tactical and practical actions from negotiation and mediation to peace imposition Morgan evaluates each strategy and tactic in terms of how well it addresses three levels of security systemic state and societal to show how they are interrelated and complementary to each other in important ways Addressing insecurity at one level often elicits further insecurity at another Morgan shows students how these various levels interact either to a state's advantage or to its detriment so they can comprehensively analyze the ways that political actors manage or incite conflict Useful pedagogical features help students master the material Terms and Concepts boxes go beyond simple definitions and provide
