

Restoration of Monuments - Rehabilitation of Historical Buildings in Attica

The volume in hand has come to supplement the two previous ones, which had been edited by the architect Yiannis Kotsopoulos under the title "Restoration of Monuments - Rehabilitation of Historical Buildings in Attica". All three of them follow the first two-volume publication "Restoration - Rehabilitation of Monuments and Historical Buildings in Northern Greece", by the architect M. Nomikos.

Succeeding the above mentioned distinguished colleagues as editor in this significant publishing venture, I decided to follow the basic structure which had already prevailed successfully. In addition, I found the Introductions and Prefaces in the above volumes satisfactory enough in common matters of debate, such as the protection and the various ranges of restoration - rehabilitation, especially as concerns the monuments and historical buildings which constitute the rather tortured architectural heritage of ours.

The present material arrangement once again followed the chronological order beginning from the Antiquities, continuing with the Byzantine and post-Byzantine period - which however have been presented through less samples than those the editor wished for - and ending up with the Modern (after 1800) and Contemporary age (even of the last century), through a good number of distinguishing cases (of public and private, smaller and bigger) buildings as well as through interventions of either a smaller or a larger scale.

At this point, I see it fit to briefly introduce the contents and the contributors to each one of the projects in this volume.

In the article about the Restoration of the Propylaea, by the director of the Hellenic Ministry of Culture Service for the Restoration of the Acropolis Monuments (H.M.C.D.R.A.M.) and civil engineer M. Ioannidou, important work is publicized for the first time. In particular, it has to do with the masterpiece building of Mnesicles 437 B.C. and the intervention on it by the most specialized teams of scientists who were in charge of conducting and supervising the application of the studies and by the marble technicians performing the tasks assigned by the H.M.C.D.R.A.M. from 1990 until today.

Indeed, a recent report of the work through the mass media announced the new marble construction of the exact replicas of two chapiters of Ionic order, which are of an exceptional quality. They have been hand-made by the marble technicians of the Propylaea project and they are considered to be the best ever designed. At the end of the restoration, the visitors to the acropolis will get the most complete impression of this unique ancient construction which has always served as entrance to the Acropolis and which has been a point of reference and a paradigm around the world for innumerable times.

In the article about the Total Transfer of the Holy Church of Saints Peter and Paul at the International Airport of Athens, in Spata, Attica, by the architect D. Korres, an intervention of special nature is presented for the first time, too. It is an intervention which aims at rescuing the post-Byzantine Monument of the early Turkish dominion period (15th century) and which is applied as an exception when all the other methods prove to be insufficient while the particular one guarantees the accomplishment of the target. Unfortunately, the monument happened to stand almost upon the western landing corridor of the new airport. After years of delay, due to the genius solution proposed by D. Korres (the brother of the architect and restorer of the Parthenon, M. Korres), within the least possible time period of 10 days, the monument was absolutely safely transferred to a distance of about 325 metres towards the west and was later offered to the residents in Spata.

In the article about the Restoration - Reconstruction of the Church of Saint Elassa in Monastiraki, in Athens, by the writer and then Head of the H.M.C.D.R.A.M. Department of Studies on Byzantine Monuments, the historical background of the church is presented. It includes the demolition by the owner of this post-Byzantine monument (15th century), during the period of the Ottoman conquer in Athens (1821 - 1840), as well as the archive, archaeology and architecture surveys which led to the most possibly exact restoration - reconstruction of it. In the near future, the now restored monument is to be integrated within the boundaries of the Hellenic Folklore Art Museum which has been scheduled by the H.M.C.D.R.A.M. to be installed in the neoclassical and other "old Athenian houses" around it.
