

THE GOLD
OF THE TIGERS
by Jorge Luis Borges

translated by Andrew Ross

IN THE DISCUSSING OF HIS WRITINGS, Borges has himself increasingly become a part of the writing of poetry. Many of his poems do not even indirectly take up literary subjects. There are rather more poems and poems that pose the reader as a contemplative than the most of his fiction. The occasional essay he discusses in My Father's House and Other Essays. However, the focus placed on memory and the passage of time that leaved off his own poems from already set personal themes and he writes, revealingly about himself in this book.

Borges writes in his Preface to The Gold of the Tigers: "In the earliest times . . . there can have existed no distance between the poems and the person. Everything must have been mixed with magic. That was not the case of Plutarch; he was the thinker and the poet. For a true poet, every moment of existence, every act, ought to be partly verse. In practice, it is not. As far as I know, no one in this day has attained that high state of awareness."

It is his constant dedication to that ideal which makes Borges's poetry the core of his work, and his own poems are a testimony to his unremitting poetic activity.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Ross, married couple, who have been living in New York since 1945, are the authors of the introduction and the preface to this book. They are also the authors of the introduction and the preface to the book The Gold of the Tigers (1955) and the book The Gold of the Tigers (1955).

THE GOLD OF THE TIGERS is a collection of poems by Jorge Luis Borges, translated by Andrew Ross. It is the first book of poems by Borges to be published in English.
