The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne William John Locke, 2015-06-12 Excerpt from The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne A Novel For reasons which will be given later I sit down here in Verona to write the history of my extravagant adventure I shall formulate and expand the rough notes in my diary which lies open before me and I shall begin with a happy afternoon in May six months ago May 20th London To day is the seventh anniversary of my release from captivity I will note it every year in my diary with a sigh of unutterable thanksgiving For seven long blessed years have I been free from the degrading influences of Jones Minor and the First Book of Euclid Some men find the modern English boy stimulating and the old Egyptian humorous Such are the born school masters and schoolmasters like poets nascuntur non fiunt What I was born passes my ingenuity to fathom Certainly not a schoolmaster and my many years of apprenticeship did not make me one They only turned me into an
