A dramatic landscape featuring a mountain peak in the foreground, partially covered in snow or light-colored rock. The sky is filled with warm, orange and yellow light, suggesting a sunset or sunrise. The overall mood is contemplative and majestic.

All nature is waiting for us to become conscious because there's a particular quality of consciousness that only humans can provide. Nature needs that consciousness; cries out for it. And the process of deciphering Nature's need, then discovering how to respond to it, is what's called learning to become human.

War II Italy had four national parks covering over five hundred thousand acres. Of course a lot went wrong with Italian nature protection too. Fascism, war, and the unbridled consumerism of the economic miracle sent conservation into a tailspin from which it only began recovering in the 1990s. This book is the first effort in English to document the rise, fall, and recovery of nature conservation in Italy. Part one covers the environmental degradation of Italy's wetlands, mountains, and forests due to unification, industrialization, and the rush toward modernization. Part two looks at the ups and downs of Italy's conservation movement in the 1990s: who were the players, what were their motives, where were they active, why did they succeed and sometimes fail.
