Minimal Residual Disease In Acute Leukemia:

Minimal Residual Disease in Acute Leukemia B. Löwenberg, A. Hagenbeek, 2013-11-11 The objective of the treatment of acute leukemia involves the eradication of all neoplastic cells including the last one Ideally treatment should be controlled by monitoring cell kill If the last cells could be discovered and their biological properties be determined the qualitative and quantitative effects of treatment should be directly evaluable This should ultimately permit a calculated tumor cell reduction thereby avoiding overtreatment and excessive toxicity and thus providing a basis for individualized antileukemic treatment In recent years several new developments have contributed to the selective discovery of minimal numbers of leukemic cells which are hidden among the normal cells in the marrow cavities These methods are the first steps to the realization of the therapeutic goals indicated above They include the production and application of monoclonal antibodies against differentiation antigens on the cell surface the use of pulse cytophotometry and cell sorter techniques the employment of cytogenetics the development of culture techniques for selective growth of precursor cells and several others These methodologies offer prospects for refined diagnosis and as far as the elimination of leukemic cells is concerned the further development of autologous bone marrow transplantation Eliminating tumor cells from autologous grafts requires the detailed knowledge of the cellular inter relationships within the neoplasm so that the neoplastic cells responsible for tumor propagation are specifically removed Recognition and characterization of the clonogenic cells of the neoplasm should then lead to determining their sensitivity to the therapeutic agents which are clinically applied

Minimal Residual Disease in Acute Leukemia 1986 A. Hagenbeek, B. Löwenberg, 2012-12-06 Relapse of leukemia following successful remission induction therapy remains a major obstacle in the treatment of patients with acute leukemia Leukemia recurs most frequently in patients with acute myeloblastic leukemia AML and high risk acute lymphoblastic leukemia ALL following chemotherapy and less often in patients with low risk ALL and particularly in patient groups submitted to allogeneic marrow transplantation It is likely that the great majority of these recurrences originate from residual leukemic cells that survive initial remission induction chemotherapy Today several research groups throughout the world place emphasis on studies concerned with the detection and treatment of minimal residual disease MRD These investigations are conducted with the common objective to tackle the remaining cells Minimal Residual Disease in Acute Leukemia 1986 summarizes the fast advancements in this area Several disciplines are concerned with the analysis of leukemic cells The perspectives of cytogenetic and molecular genetic approaches for application in the detection of MRD are reviewed In this respect modern cytogenetics provide highly specific tumor markers The resolution of cytogenetic methods can be particularly improved when combined with other techniques which select relevant subpopulations of cells Characterization of oncogenes and gene rearrangements including those of immunoglobulin and T cell receptor genes and the measurement of gene products have been established Techniques based on these approaches offer interesting tools for the detection of MRD New possibilities of in solid and hematological malignancies address stem cell biology genetics epigenetics and micro environmental regulation of dormant MRD Novel insight into technologies for molecular phenotyping of MRD and monitoring of CTCs DTCs and cell free RNA and DNA are also addressed extensively Five chapters explore the above concepts in solid cancers such as prostate breast melanoma head and neck and esophageal Two chapters also explore the basic mechanisms of vascular biology targeting and epigenetic mechanisms regulating pluripotency programs during dormancy Similar biology is explored in hematological malignancies such as T ALL CML AML and multiple myeloma in additional four chapters This book is edited and prefaced by Dr Julio Aguirre Ghiso an expert in dormancy and recurrence The chapters are written by world recognized experts Drs Ravi Bahtia Samir Parekh Russel Taichman Monica Guzman David Hoon Denis Schewe Irmela Jeremias Cyrus Ghajar Maria Soledad Sosa and Nicholas Stoecklein The topic of this book is of particular interest to both basic cancer cell biologists and physician scientists that are working to provide a more integrated view of the biology of MRD and to those interested in working on or learning about this paradigm The integrated and cross disciplinary focus of the book from biology to medicine seeks to help bridge gaps to improve cancer care and prevent recurrences Fast Facts: Measurable Residual Disease Justin Loke, 2021-01-26

Conventional methods of detecting disease remission in cancers such as leukemia rely on microscopic analysis of tissue samples Measurable or minimal residual disease MRD describes the presence of disease beyond the levels of sensitivity afforded by microscopy Fast Facts Measurable Residual Disease describes what is meant by MRD the opportunities and challenges afforded by its identification and the advantages and disadvantages of the methods used for its detection Specific examples are given to illustrate the implications of detecting MRD in different disease scenarios with emphasis on acute myeloid and lymphoblastic leukemias With the recognition and monitoring of MRD likely to play an increasingly important role in disease prognosis and subsequent treatment direction this accessible resource is ideal for any healthcare professional wanting to know more about this exciting and fast moving area Table of Contents What is measurable residual disease How is MRD measured What is the significance of MRD Detection and Eradication of Minimal Residual Disease in Acute Myeloid Leukemia Nicole Feller, 2006

Ludwig, Eckhard Thiel, 1993-07-27 The development of new techniques such as immuno phenotyping cytogenetic investigations and more recently molecular studies has considerably increased our diagnostic repertoire and broadened our ideas about the biology of acute leukemias While immunophenotyping with mono clonal antibodies has yielded increased diagnostic precision and made it possible to develop a highly reproducible classification of acute leukemias based on cell biological features further insights have been gained into the patho genetic mechanisms involved in leukemogenesis by means of cytogenetic detection of acquired structural chromosomal abnormalities Analysis of the leukemia associated chromo somal breakpoints using molecular techniques can now pinpoint many genomic sites essential for normal development and maturation of hematopoietic cells but functionally disrupted in leukemic cells The main goal of the international workshop that we held in Berlin with a select group of scientists and clinicians involved in leukemia research was to describe the state of the art and new developments in the immunologic cytogenetic and molecular characterization of acute leukemias and to discuss the clinical importance of cell biological features After introductory survey lectures dealing with the immunological and molecular biological characteristics of normal vs malignant lymphatic and myeloid progenitor cells the workshop centered on con tributions characterizing the immunophenotype and both numerical and structural chromosomal abnormalities in acute leukemias
