Minority Access to Higher Education Patrick A. Roche, 1994-05-24 Educators in higher education continuously grapple with the problem of retention particularly with minority students This book examines a model for an alternate system of educational delivery which addresses the revolving door phenomenon Utilizing the Minnesota Experiment with neighborhood learning centers in North and South Minneapolis as a case study this work hypothesizes that three theoretical constructs are vital to the sustaining of such an alternate educational delivery mechanism sponsored mobility on the part of leaders in the community and at all levels of administration a value added pipeline approach that takes stock of cultural barriers and traditional methods of grading and assessment and a milieu for study that is user friendly Analyzing the successes but also the failures of these centers as confirmation of the value of the neighborhood learning scheme the author proposes that educators in duty and conscience are called upon to invest resources and special effort to avoid pitfalls and adopt measures to ensure the fruition of such ventures Contents CHAPTER I Introduction Nature of This Study Limited Focus of Study Institutions Under Study Hypothesis of Study Overview of Study CHAPTER II Concept History and Legal Perspectives of Affirmative Action in Higher Education CHAPTER III Conceptual Frameworks Meritocracy vs Affirmative Action CHAPTER IV General Thrust of Political Analysis CHAPTER V Demographic Features of Phyllis Wheatley and Sabathani Neighborhood Learning Centers and Minneapolis Community College Outreach CHAPTER VI Minneapolis Community College Outreach to the Two Neighborhood Centers Sabathani and Phyllis Wheatley Conclusion Annotated Bibliography Appendices

Creating Public Policy for Minority Access to Higher Education Gina Mendez, 2006 It is a well known fact that one way to a better life is through education Individuals who have a college education will earn significantly higher income than those who only have a high school diploma McGlynn 2001 Having a college degree is not only beneficial to an individual but a community with an educated work force can acquire significant economic and social benefits If there is no access to higher education individuals and the community generally cannot advance as well economically Individuals living in South Texas did not have the opportunity to improve their socio economic status because of the lack of public institutions of higher education in their region The South Texas Region is comprised mostly of a Hispanic population It has the state s least educated population the state s poorest facilities and the least capacity to generate local taxes to improve educational opportunities Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities 1993 This study explored predisposing conditions such as racism and examined critical elements such as economic and political power in San Antonio and the dynamics that empowered a minority group to take the fight of access to a public university to a higher level According to the legislators interviewed the move to create a second UT System campus in downtown San Antonio was a community grassroots effort that had a buy in from members of the Bexar County delegation The legislators proposed legislation and followed the bill through the approval process in the Texas House and Texas Senate Before the bill was approved a lawsuit had been filed by the League of United Latin American Citizens and the American GI Forum against the Texas governor alleging the State had violated the constitutional rights of Mexican Americans by having unequal access to a comprehensive public university During a time when tuition has skyrocketed and the cost of gasoline has soared it is amazing how the adage Build it and they will come continues to fulfill the dreams of students who may have never had the opportunity to attend a comprehensive institution of higher education had it not been for the UTSA Downtown Campus

The Underrepresented Minority Schernavia Hall,2018 This qualitative study explores the educational experiences of African American students from the rural region of Alabama commonly known at the Black Belt and how the resources they received helped them prepare and gain access to higher education The purpose of this study was to examine how factors such as rurality race and class impact rural African American students access to higher education Rural African American students are an underrepresented population within the realm of higher education and their experiences are often missing from research The aim of this study is to provide greater insight into the barriers rural African American students face accessing higher education Through individual in depth interviews this study examined the educational experiences of six African American students and their reflection on living in a rural community schooling and ways they navigated the college enrollment process This study adds to the limited literature on the experiences of rural African American students and college access Results of the study reveal how the intersectionality of rurality race and class must be considered when addressing the college access problem for rural African American students
