Ronnie Davis, 2013-08 Integrity is important to me so essential to my life that I decided to write my own prefatory comments rather than ask someone else I was blessed with a mother and father of integrity in the sense of honesty and trustworthiness Throughout childhood adolescence and early adulthood my understanding of integrity was limited to this selfsame sense of fair dealing with people After taking my doctorate in economics at the University of Virginia I began a career in academics eventually a fifteen year stint as a business school dean at three different universities In 1971 I began a robust management consulting practice alongside my academic career Consulting reshaped my understanding and sense of integrity Working with companies to improve productivity cost and profit as well as to facilitate strategic planning I became concerned about organizational integrity actually appalled at lapses in organizational integrity that I observed This concern led to more thinking about integrity itself First I realized that integrity comes from the same Latin root as integer meaning a whole number I then realized that integrity implies parts that must join combine and unite to make the whole Next I realized that organizational integrity joins combines and unites persons of integrity In other words organizational integrity is based on personal integrity Finally I realized that my understanding of integrity was too narrow too limited Honesty and trustworthiness are not integrity The characteristics of honesty and trustworthiness are outward signs of integrity When a person has integrity he or she is honest and trustworthy
