

MANAGEMENT BY OBJECTIVES VS THE ACTIVITY TRAP

Over half a century ago, Odiorne warned us: don't confuse movement with achievement.

Why is that still so relevant today?

The Activity Trap

People end up trying to just 'stay busy' as a defense.

Activity becomes the goal in itself. They may have started out with a clear goal, but quickly get so caught up in the process of working that they forget the bigger picture.

Eventually, even top leaders lose sight of why the company exists and begin demanding more activity instead of more results.

More staff hired to control meaningless tasks - performance drops as focus shifts from results to routines.

MBO

MBO creates a real connection between day-to-day control and long-term planning, they become two sides of the same coin.

Managers and employees agree on goals together, creating a sense of ownership and commitment.

Decisions are made with purpose not out of habit. Freedom to act replaces micromanagement.

Outline the main strategic choices and the consequences of each option. While operational objectives ask, "How can we do this better?", strategic objectives ask, "Are we doing the right things?"
