

But this afternoon, after attending the morning service at the First Baptist Church, the old tailor lay down to take his Sunday nap. His room is on the second floor of Mrs. Dunn's house, and two of the last things he saw of the familiar life of F. G. Johnson were the Bible with the gilt letters on it and a row of tomato plants he had recently set out in his garden.

Mrs. Dunn went out visiting while he was asleep. The old man woke about 6 o'clock. The room was strange to him. Whose Bible was that? He had never seen that garden out there before. What hills were they over there? He remembered no such hills near Burlington. And where was the river that runs by Burlington?

Mrs. Dunn, who had learned the facts about her roomer, at once suspected that something had happened inside of his head at last. She telephoned to Dr. J. H. Buchanan. One of the men who last week recognized old Mr. Brewin was the Rev. Dr. J. C. Buchanan, father of the physician, who has been visiting his son in Plainfield for several weeks. The Rev. Dr. Buchanan had often seen Mr. Brewin at Burlington, and had known him intimately at Pemberton, where the old tailor and the preacher had mutual friends. The preacher accompanied his son on this call.

The moment the new-found Mr. Brewin saw his old friend come up the walk he rushed out and greeted him enthusiastically, though last week he didn't know him. The preacher and old Mr. Brewin sat down and talked over work they had done together in the Baptist Church at Burlington. They recalled hours they had spent together on the front porch of Tailor Stratton in Pemberton.

"Do you remember anything you have been doing these nearly four years?" Mr. Brewin was asked. "Four years?" he repeated. "Why, certainly. I have been running the furnishing store down on Main Street, and both it and the tailor shop are doing well, indeed. Three or four days ago when I left—I guess I've been sick a day or so—things were getting along first class."

Finally they made the old man realize that he had been another man for nearly four years. They told him of his own disappearance. At the end of the long story, and after he had convinced himself that it was all true, he murmured in his mild way, instinctively rubbing the top of his head:

"Well, I hope I haven't done anybody any harm while I was away."

The incident of Mr. Brewin's taking out another insurance policy in the Foresters, under the name of Frank G. Johnson,

The Oxford Annotated Mishnah Shaye J. D. Cohen, Robert Goldenberg, Hayim Lapin, 2022-06-30 The Mishnah is the foundational document of rabbinic law and one could say of rabbinic Judaism itself. It is overwhelmingly technical and focused on matters of practice custom and law. The Oxford Annotated Mishnah is the first annotated translation of this work making the text accessible to all. With explanations of all technical terms and expressions, The Oxford Annotated Mishnah brings together an expert group of translators and annotators to assemble a version of the Mishnah that requires no specialist knowledge.
