Abstract: This article aims to present the impact of knowledge management on non-profit organizations. The collected empirical evidence clearly indicates the need to change the employment policy and include volunteers in knowledge management. The article is based on organizations operating in Poland, which narrows down the research to be able to transfer it to not-for-profit organizations operating in other European Union countries. However, it allows you to join the debate on knowledge management and its inclusion in the management system of non-governmental organizations.

Keywords: Knowledge management, Non-profit organization, Social economy entities

1. Introduction

This article aims to contribute to the literature on knowledge management, especially knowledge management in non-profit organizations. Differences can be noticed between individual NGOs due to different approaches to knowledge. NGOs in Poland face many problems and barriers. Most often these are financial barriers, but knowledge management in these organizations has not been properly researched. Few studies published in this area address the lack or inability to diagnose human capital problems and knowledge linkages. While source literature in the field of management emphasizes the importance of knowledge as a strategic resource for organizations in the economic sphere, there is a lack of literature on knowledge management in the non-profit sector. Few publications (Kong 2007, 2008; Sillanpää et al. 2010; Massingham 2018) on the use of intellectual capital (IC) for strategic positioning of non-profit organizations emphasize the need for further research on this subject. A better understanding of resource allocation through knowledge management will contribute to increasing the social and economic performance of these organizations. However, we believe that despite the different paradigms on which both organizations are built: not for profit and for profit, they both need to consider knowledge as a determinant of effective management.

The article is divided into a theoretical and research part. The theoretical part presents literature in the field of knowledge management and the opportunities offered by its use in non-profit organizations. The practical part, based on statistical data, was aimed at diagnosing the cause of the problems of incompetent knowledge management. The focus was on the forms of employment of employees and volunteers of these organizations as ICs. Based on the analysis of the literature on the subject, a research hypothesis was formulated assuming that knowledge management in non-profit organizations, especially in the Polish economy, is insufficient, which results in the organization's inability to acquire and retain knowledge from people involved in the activities of NGOs, which results in unstable forms of staff employment.

In this paper, the terms non-profit, non-government organizations (NGO), not for profit, and the nomenclature of the legal form of these organizations, i.e. Associations and Foundations, are used interchangeably.

2. Literature Overview

Knowledge in organizations constitutes an intangible resource that has an impact on the broader economic and business performance of a company. In our considerations, knowledge management concerns not for profit organizations whose economic efficiency translates into implementing the activities for which these organizations were set up. Knowledge as a resource constitutes an indispensable part of creating added value to any organization, which is why research into knowledge management by non-profit organizations, whose activities are focused on both social and economic aspects, is so important. The use of solutions that come directly from the enterprise sphere is not suitable for NGOs, therefore it is urgent to develop a knowledge management framework for this sector.

2.1 Knowledge Property

The term knowledge management is used to refer to the practices, implicit or explicit, used by an organization to acquire new knowledge and to reorganize and disseminate existing knowledge. The term also includes strategies to prevent an organization's own knowledge from "leaking out" or to encourage its dissemination to partner entities, as well as others from whom the NGO can mutually benefit due to its exchange (Hall, Mallesse, 2006). The following facts result from the property of knowledge:
