Newborn Intensive Care:

Newborn Intensive Care Jeanette Zaichkin,1996      Neonatal Intensive Care Units (NICUs) Francesco Martines,2017

From World Health Organization data the prevalence of hearing impairment among infants varies between 0.5 and 3.0 cases per thousand but in children hospitalized in the Newborn Intensive Care Unit NICU and in those with other risk factors i.e anatomically small for gestational age craniofacial abnormalities intrauterine infections family history of hearing loss ototoxic drugs mechanical ventilation etc the prevalence is 10-20 times greater Newborn Intensive Care Unit NICU can be defined as an intensive care unit for sick newborns who need specialized treatment NICU combines equipment and advanced technology with medical staff specially trained in newborn care The Joint Committee on Infant Hearing JCIH identified many risk factors in NICU infants like prolonged mechanical ventilation asphyxia low birth weight and ototoxic medication and so it also considers intensive care as a whole a risk factor The present book focuses its attention on this hearing loss risk factor starting from risk factors and screening strategies highlighting the various neonatal levels of care focusing on the treatment of infants with neural tube defects and the future motor development of premature babies This should be done until caregivers can get the attention of drug therapies used in the NICU      Ethics of Newborn Intensive Care Albert R. newborn hospitalized in an intensive care unit is immense The parents perceptions of the child s fragility and of their role in the vulnerable child s life represent important facts of the crisis in which the infant and the parents are involved Such early stress marks the child s later development which may include chronic ailments and learning disabilities This book explores a whole spectrum of psychological questions raised by the birth of medically fragile infants from the parents ability to restore a sense of meaning and mastery in the face of the profound challenges confronting them to the importance of social support and coping strategies and finally to the crisis of newborn intensive care in the context of the marital relationship
