Management of International Institutions and NGOs Eduardo Missoni, Daniele Alesani, 2023-08-31 This second edition of Management of International Institutions and NGOs covers all key topics in global governance from a unique management perspective. It analyzes the management challenges associated with international cooperation rather than the more commonly explored political or economic lenses. This text is structured to enable students to connect theory with practice beginning with the main management frameworks developed in the context of corporate and national public nonprofit organizations and adapting them to the specificity of international institutions and international non governmental organizations. This leads to the identification of a tailored approach to international organization management based on their institutional and operational settings stakeholder groups core business staff profiles and financial arrangements. The authors then connect this theory with practice by linking frameworks to several case studies and best practices of organizations currently experimenting with management systems and tools with case studies including the World Bank and the Gates Foundation. This edition has been extensively revised and updated with an expanded conceptual framework inclusive of systemic theories of organization new cases throughout and new chapters on leadership supply chain and operations and human centered digitization. This comprehensive textbook is a must own resource for students and academics involved with studying and working with international organizations.

The Anthropology of Conservation NGOs Peter Bille Larsen, Dan Brockington, 2017-08-30 This book explores how NGOs have been influential in shaping global biodiversity conservation policy and practice. It encapsulates a growing body of literature that has questioned the mandates roles and effectiveness of these organizations and the critique of these critics. This volume seeks to nurture an open conversation about contemporary NGO practices through analysis and engagement.

NGOs Engaging with Business Simon Heap, 2000 This presents the findings of Intrac's inquiry into the changing nature of relationships between NGOs and the Private Sector. By learning the lessons of such engagements this two year research mainly funded by the Ford and Soros Foundations explores the potential for the two sectors to work together for global development in the future. The book covers a variety of important subjects affecting NGO business relations such as the strategy and tactics for engagement from adversarial to cosy funding partners with the emerging middle ground of negotiated constructive co operation what development NGOs might learn from environmental NGOs and how NGOs should tackle corporate codes of conduct. Several NGO business collaborations are documented in detail including the WWF Unilever created Marine Stewardship Council Rainforest Alliance's environmental management partnership and Chiquita in the Costa Rican banana sector and the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industries and Living Earth's partnership with Shell in Nigeria and the UK. By using examples from Colombia Kazakhstan Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan the Southern and Eastern country specific factors that determine different levels of

NGO business relations are examined Ngos, the Government, and the Private Sector in Chile Carlo Dade, 2013 Relations between the private sector and nongovernmental organizations NGOs in Chile are growing and improving as a result of the recent democratization of Chilean society and accelerating global integration of its economy Both groups are just now coming to terms with these changes and are seeking to adjust their relations with each other and this new society Yet historic distrust and antipathy between the two groups remains a significant problem 1 A culture of distrust and disinterest among the Chilean private sector toward nonprofit work and volunteerism is another factor from the past that continues to affect relations Although the situation is starting to change at present historical animosities remain strong Democratization is introducing public participation and debate into realms that were until recently the sole province of state fiat In the environmental area this is manifest in the Basic Law on the Environment This law is an evolving experiment to develop environmental policy and regulation The law which originally encouraged environmental assessments EAs for large projects has recently been amended so that they are now required More importantly the law codifies the right of public participation in this process This is compelling new considerations into project planning as groups that were ignored in the past must now be brought into the development process Global integration is forcing consideration of issues such as the harmonization of environmental regulations with NAFTA standards More significantly though integration in the form of joint ventures is introducing the concept of business responsibility in environmental and social concerns to the Chilean private sector While this has not changed its historic animosity toward NGOs it has brought a realization that working with NGOs especially the new breed of NGOs is possible This new breed of NGO is the result of a transformation within the NGO community Older confrontational organizations that are products of the anti Pinochet movement and rigid in their hostility to the private sector are becoming marginalized by or evolving into more moderate organizations The means by which older NGOs are being marginalized is funding The newer groups are starting to attract funding from domestic sources including the private sector This is something that the old line NGOs have never been able to accomplish A second consequence of global integration and democratization has been to force the private sector to rethink and in many cases consider for the first time how it can work with civil society which has concomitantly engendered the demand for this new type of NGO The Chilean government mirrors the historic conflict between old line NGOs and the private sector Both groups exercise influence with those in the government sympathetic to their views Though the business community seems to have an advantage in this regard it is not absolute and political influence can shift depending upon the constituency behind the issue at hand This exercise of influence is also unilateral NGOs and the business community lobby the government but the government has little influence with or control over the two groups in return The government has turned to NGOs for advice in drafting environmental legislation and developing social assistance programs In the health and housing sectors for example the government continues to rely upon NGOs to identify areas of need and develop innovations in service delivery The report identifies and discusses the most important characteristics of the NGO and business communities in Chile It then discusses NGO funding issues and concludes with an analysis of future prospects Included are two case studies that illustrate these Annexes contain a list of prominent NGOs and sections of the Basic Law on the Environment dealing with citizen participation in environmental assessments conflict brought the role of private sector banks in project financing and the pursuant environmental and social issues to the public consciousness. On the websites of most of the NGOs involved in the fight against the pipeline there are relatively few mentions of private sector banks compared to the number of references to BP and the public financial institutions. BankTrack suggested that the Equator Banks were becoming a lobby and that the purpose of the World Bank review process was to protect the interests of communities potentially affected by development projects not those of private investors.²² One Friends of the Earth spokesperson called the letter outrageous and called on the banks to honour the spirit of the Principles while another accused them. According to one banker groups like BankTrack are focused on environmental issues and do not see the trade offs with other aspects of the decision making process such as the benefits of development to local populations or even social concerns more generally.³⁰ The banks argue that NGOs discount the value of bringing scarce capital to developing markets and the risks the banks must bear in doing so. Calling the policy a landmark and lauding the way in which the NGO and the bank worked together to develop the policy none of the fiery rhetoric of the past was apparent in a recent RAN communiqué on the topic.³³ At least for now.
