Traffic Grooming in Optical WDM Mesh Networks Keyao Zhu, Hongyue Zhu, Biswanath Mukherjee, 2006-03-30 Optical networks based on wavelength division multiplexing WDM technology offer the promise to satisfy the bandwidth requirements of the Internet infrastructure and provide a scalable solution to support the bandwidth needs of future applications in the local and wide areas. In a wavelength routed network an optical channel referred to as a lightpath is set up between two network nodes for communication. Using WDM technology an optical fiber link can support multiple non overlapping wavelength channels each of which can be operated at the data rate of 10 Gbps or 40 Gbps today. On the other hand only a fraction of customers are expected to have a need for such a high bandwidth. Due to the large cost of the optical backbone infrastructure and enormous WDM channel capacity connection requests with diverse low speed bandwidth requirements need to be efficiently groomed onto high capacity wavelength channels. This book investigates the optimized design provisioning and performance analysis of traffic groomable WDM networks and proposes and evaluates new WDM network architectures. Organization of the Book: Significant amount of research effort has been devoted to traffic grooming in SONET WDM ring networks since the current telecom networks are mainly deployed in the form of ring topologies or interconnected rings. As the long haul backbone networks are evolving to irregular mesh topologies traffic grooming in optical WDM mesh networks becomes an extremely important and practical research topic for both industry and academia.
