Use job postings which describe what people should accomplish in the role, rather than a list of qualifications they should have.

Have conditions robust when people apply for roles, other than a CV and cover letter.

Have new team members onboard themselves. Create and use an onboarding site and/or an onboarding passport.

Only when employees are involved and actively participate in shaping the organization's strategy can they really feel ownership.

Remember to give team members autonomy in order to establish the paths for development.

Performance models that are more focused on the developmental experience.

Implement a peer rewards system, acknowledging the efforts for rewards.

The departure of an employee is also an experience and requires great care.
