ETS R&D Connections. Number 10 Ou Lydia Liu,2009 As college tuitions and fees continue to grow students parents and public policymakers are interested in understanding how public universities operate and whether their investments are well utilized Accountability in public higher education has come into focus following the attention accountability has received in K 12 education Against this backdrop the Voluntary System of Accountability VSA was developed in 2007 by the American Association of State Colleges and Universities AASCU and the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges NASULGC As of April 2009 321 institutions from all 50 U S states have signed up for the VSA program which evaluates core educational outcomes in public colleges and universities The VSA uses the term value added to refer to the learning progress college and university students make from freshman to senior year measured by looking at the difference between freshmen and senior performance on one of three standardized tests Because a good education has become a pathway to opportunities and success all stakeholders including students parents faculty members institutional administrators testing organizations and public policymakers deserve to know whether institutions have done their best to maximize student learning and have effectively utilized public resources These stakeholders need to reach a scientific common ground as to how institutions should be evaluated and what constituencies should be involved This common understanding is crucial to the fruitfulness of programs such as the VSA that aim to evaluate institutional effectiveness

Fonseca,2019-05-15 This open access book focuses on trends in educational inequality using twenty years of grade 8 student data collected from 13 education systems by the IEA s Trends in Mathematics and Science Study TIMSS between 1995 and 2015 While the overall positive association between family socioeconomic status SES and student achievement is well documented in the literature the magnitude of this relationship is contingent on social contexts and is expected to vary by education system Research on how such associations differ across societies and how the strength of these relationships has changed over time is limited. This study therefore addresses an important research and policy question by examining changes in the inequality of educational outcomes due to SES over this 20 year period and also examines the extent to which the performance of students from disadvantaged backgrounds has improved over time in each education system. Education systems generally aim to narrow the achievement gap between low and high SES students and to improve the performance of disadvantaged students. However the lack of quantifiable and comprehensible measures makes it difficult to assess and monitor the effect of such efforts. In this study a novel measure of SES that is consistent across all TIMSS cycles allows students to be categorized into different socioeconomic groups. This measure of SES may also contribute to future research using TIMSS trend data. Readers will gain new insight into how educational inequality has changed in the education systems studied and how such change may relate to the more complex picture of macroeconomic changes in those societies.
