It is clear that in the modern era the number of languages spoken on Earth is declining. There are various reasons for this and it could be seen as either a positive or negative development, depending upon your perspective. This essay will suggest that there are great arguments for both views.

Those who think that this trend is a negative one point inevitably to the loss of cultural identity and a rising trend for linguistic hegemony that have swept the globe in the past century. Prior to this, the world was a diverse place, filled with disparate cultures that were entirely alien to one another. This variety made our species interesting and beautiful, but now, thanks to colonisation and globalisation, these differences are being lost and people are losing what made them unique. Instead, people talk the same language and about the same cultural influences.

However, this could be seen as a relatively positive trend, too. In the modern era there are fewer wars and far more dialogue between nations. People from all over the world can communicate online using a few popular languages and this could be said to bring our planet together. When people speak thousands of different languages, it is hard for them to communicate but now it is possible for people to find a common language and communicate with it. This has fostered living relationships as well as business and cultural advancement, and it has made it possible for people to attain levels of education that were previously impossible.

In conclusion, there are strong arguments supporting both views. It is definitely a positive thing to have some common languages but it cannot be denied that there are great losses entailed, too.
