Natural Histories Of Discourse:

Natural Histories of Discourse Michael Silverstein, Greg Urban, 1996-07-15 Is culture simply a more or less set text we can learn to read Since the early 1970s the notion of culture as text has animated anthropologists and other analysts of culture Michael Silverstein and Greg Urban present this stunning collection of cutting edge ethnographies arguing that the divide between fleeting discursive practice and formed text is a constructed one and that the constructional process reveals culture to those who can interpret it Eleven original essays of natural history range in focus from nuptial poetry of insult among Wolof griots to case based teaching methods in first year law school classrooms Stage by stage they give an idea of the cultural processes of entextualization and contextualization of discourse that they so richly illustrate The contributors varied backgrounds include anthropology psychiatry education literary criticism and law making this collection invaluable not only to anthropologists and linguists but to all analysts of culture widespread in her era cultural attention to the real physical world was quite limited Popular artistic forms represented the natural world through specific metaphors for the American experience cultivating a national tradition of valuing nature in terms of humanity Johnson crosses disciplinary boundaries to demonstrate that anthropocentric understandings of the natural world result not only from the growing gulf between science and imagination that C P Snow located in the early twentieth century but also and surprisingly from cultural productions traditionally viewed as positive engagements with the environment By uncovering the roots of a cultural alienation from nature Passions for Nature explains how the United States came to be a nation that simultaneously reveres the natural world and yet remains dangerously distant from it
