Nature Of Syntactic Representation:

The Nature of Syntactic Representation Pauline Jacobson, G.K. Pullum, 2012-12-06 The work collected in this book represents the results of some intensive recent work on the syntax of natural languages. The authors' differing viewpoints have in common the program of revising current conceptions of syntactic representation so that the role of transformational derivations is reduced or eliminated. The fact that the papers cross refer to each other a good deal and that authors assuming quite different frameworks are aware of each other's results and address themselves to shared problems is partly the result of a conference on the nature of syntactic representation that was held at Brown University in May 1979 with the express purpose of bringing together different lines of research in syntax. The papers in this volume mostly arise out of work that was presented in preliminary form at that conference though much rewriting and further research has been done in the interim period. Two papers are included because although they were not given even in preliminary form at the conference it has become clear since then that they interrelate with the work of the conference so much that they cannot reasonably be left out. Gerald Gazdar's statement of his program for phrase structure description of natural language forms the theoretical basis that is assumed by Maling and Zaenen and by Sag and David Dowty's paper represents a bridge between the relational grammar exemplified here in the papers by Perlmutter and Postal on the one hand and the Montague The Aspectual Nature of Syntactic Complementation René Henricus Mulder, 1992 The Nature and Structure of Content Jeffrey C. King, 2009 King formulates an account of the metaphysical nature of propositions and explains what it is that binds together the constituents of structured propositions and imposes structure on them. Philosophers and graduate students with an interest in the philosophy of language and metaphysics will benefit from this book. Proceedings of the ... Matthew Husband, 2010 Since at least Verkuyl 1972 aktionsart has been considered a property of phrasal configurations minimally resulting from a combination of a predicate and its internal argument. This has been demonstrated most clearly in the literature on telicity where certain predicate argument configurations allow for a telic interpretation while others permit only an atelic interpretation. The properties shared by nominals and events and the manner of their composition has been the source of much debate leading to a rich literature on the composition of events. Largely left out of this debate however has been the role that arguments might play if any at all in the composition of states This dissertation explores the role arguments and predicates play in determining the availability of an existential interpretation of a stative subject one property distinguishing between the stage level and individual level behavior of predicates It develops a theory of aktionsart in which quantization the opposition of quantized and homogeneous structures plays a central role in determining the aspectual behavior of stative predicates It argues that the distinction between stage level and individual level states is determined compositionally taking into account properties of the predicate both verbal and adjectival and its arguments I begin by observing two empirical puzzles which affect the availability of existential interpretation the effects of internal arguments in verbal statives first observed in Fernald 1994 and the scale structure effects of adjectival predicates Pursuing an analogy between the availability of existential interpretation in states and telicity in events I explore the possible role verbs in stative predicates play in determining the existential interpretation of their subject ultimately arguing that there are no individual level or stage level verbs I then turn to the role played by verbal arguments in stative predicates I propose in opposition to topic comment theories of the internal argument effects that the quantization of the object of transitive stative verbs determines whether they license an existential interpretation of their subject Predicates with quantized objects license an existential interpretation while those with homogeneous objects do not Given the structural analogy between the availability of existential interpretation and telicity I propose that stative and eventive predicates are composed by the same mechanisms with the distinction between states and events arising from the selectional restrictions on Voice following Kratzer 1996 2004 I then turn to adjectival predicates and the observation that their scale structure influences the availability of existential interpretation I demonstrate that scale structure is a type of quantization closed scales are quantized open scales are homogeneous and argue that this compositionally determines their stage level individual level behavior I further consider the role arguments play in determining the availability of existential interpretation observing that as with telicity the quantization of arguments affects a predicate's stage level individual level behavior The dissertation closes with an overview of its content and presents a highly speculative discussion on the role played by quantization in language and the possible role it may play in vision suggesting that quantization may be a core component of cognition more generally The dissertation citations contained here are published with the permission of ProQuest llc Further reproduction is prohibited without permission Copies of dissertations may be obtained by Telephone 800 1 800 521 0600 Web page <http://www.proquest.com/en> US products dissertations individuals.shtml McGill Working Papers in Linguistics ,2004 Semantic Structures Renate Bartsch,Theo Vennemann,1972 *Akten Des XIV.
