Window Light Portraits

Opposite page: Dark, natural light on the side of the lighthouse in the morning, with all windows open to let in as much light as the opposite side.

10. Light is not always your enemy when the window blinds are open. When you're in the process of shooting, the window is on the right, you can open your shades to reveal bright light from the opposite window or blinds, or any bright window directly across the room, and it's that simple.

11. For most window-light photos, "natural light" was taken at the side of your face with a camera that's oriented to the sun with the blinds drawn, so the sun follows you as you move. But for me, by shooting the opposite side, I can move the sun away from me, so the sun is on the other side of the window, and I'm not in the sun. This allows me to make sure a window face looks better and a square face (facing the window) looks better.

12. This window-light photo is a little higher than your standard pose, so you're preparing less. Also, to allow people shooting a little lower or higher, open the blinds before you photograph. As you follow the sun, the sun will follow the blinds, but you will still have your subject face the window directly toward the sun (so the side of the face is the side of the window away, as that's the side of the sun to the left).
