Matthew F. Cancian,Michael W. Klein,2015 We show a statistically significant and quantitatively meaningful decline in the quality of commissioned officers from 1980 to 2014 as measured by the scores of Marine officers on the General Classification Test GCT using data obtained from a Freedom of Information Act request This test has been shown to be a good predictor of success in the military This result differs from the widely studied increase in the quality of enlisted personnel since 1973 when conscription ended and the All Volunteer Force AVF began We consider a range of possible causes for this decline We focus on the fact that during this period Marine officers had to have a four year college degree and there has been an expansion of the pool of young Americans in college We find that other factors such as the increasing diversity of the pool of incoming officers have not contributed in any meaningful way to the decline in average annual GCT
