Natural patterns constitute one of the most diverse features observed in wild animals The development of such patterns requires a series of morphogenetic events involving a differential response of a naïve tissue to chemical and mechanical positional cues To what extent these processes contribute to the shape of the natural variation remains unclear In birds feather primordia are implanted in typical geometries which vary between birds in primordia size spacing and pattern regularity It has been shown that the development of the feather array surely involves self organising processes Such processes rely on molecular and cellular factors that cumulate and cooperate temporally and spatially in the developing skin We showed that the patterning of feather primordia involves prior regionalisation of the skin into competent domains forming a specie specific pre pattern that influences the resulting pattern The comparative description of the local variation of the feather array in these birds according to their initial competent domains shows that variation in the amplitude of dermal cell anisotropy correlates with variation in pattern regularity Using ex vivo perturbations of skin architecture by an inhibitor of actin filament polymerisation I showed that the anisotropy of dermal cells prior to feather primordia formation can be seen a readout of the competent state of the tissue to form a regular pattern These results provide insights into the cellular basis of self organisation and demonstrate that tissue morphology constrain the cell response to the positional cues and contribute to shape the variation of the geometry of the feather array observed in nature Current Perspectives in microRNAs

(miRNA) Shao-Yao Ying, 2008-09-12 Nearly 97% of the human genome is the non coding DNA which varies from one species to another and changes in these sequences are frequently noticed to manifest clinical and circumstantial malfunction Numerous non protein coding genes are recently found to encode microRNAs which are responsible for RNA mediated gene silencing through RNA interference RNAi like pathways MicroRNAs miRNAs small single stranded 17-25 nucleotide RNAs capable of interfering with intracellular messenger RNAs mRNAs that contain either complete or partial complementarity are useful for the design of new therapies against cancer polymorphism and viral mutation Currently over 1000 native miRNA species found in vertebrates and many more new miRNA homologs continue to be identified however most of their functions remain to be determined In this book many new perspectives of the miRNA research are reviewed and discussed including their roles in stem cell maintenance embryonic development tissue differentiation adult physiology disease pathology cancer research viral infection genetic engineering in plants and utility in cosmetic applications These new findings may not only provide significant insight into the various mechanisms of miRNAs but also offer a great opportunity in developing new therapeutic interventions

Integrins, 2007-08-27 An integrin or integrin receptor is an integral membrane protein in the plasma membrane of cells It plays a role in the attachment of a cell to the extracellular matrix ECM and to other cells and in signal transduction from the ECM to the cell. There are many types of integrin and many cells have multiple types on their surface. Integrins are of vital importance to all metazoans from humans to sponges. This volume in Methods in Enzymology presents methods for studying integrins.

Using a classical morphological approach to embryology, it offers mechanistic explanations for both normal and abnormal human development, enabling readers to understand development in terms of cellular and molecular controls.

Biology of the Integument: Vertebrates Jürgen Bereiter-Hahn, A. Gedeon Matoltsy, K. Sylvia Richards, 1984. The integument plays an important role in the survival of meta zoans by separating and protecting them from a hostile environ ment Its function ranges from protection against injury and in fection participation in the regulation of body temperature and water balance to respiratory activity monitoring of the environ ment and production of signals related to behaviour All these result from specific structural biochemical and physiological properties of intra and extracellular components of the integu ment Thus its characterization can be best accomplished by a multidisciplinary approach with authors specialized in different fields of science This multi author book in two volumes provides an up to date survey of the literature The first volume deals with the integument of invertebrates the second with that of vertebrates both organized primarily on a phylum basis As the level of knowledge on the integument of phyla differs considerably the information provided is correspondingly either limited or condensed For some of the smaller groups of invertebrates little information is available as often only a few electron micrographs are to be found in the literature on the other hand from the large body of knowledge existing for vertebrates particularly for mammals no complete overview can be provided but publica tions giving access to further information have been reviewed critically
