National Audit Office (NAO) - Department of Health: Emergency Admissions to Hospital: Managing the Demand - HC 739 Great Britain: National Audit Office, 2013-10-31 Many emergency admissions to hospital are avoidable and many patients stay in hospital longer than is necessary Improving the flow of patients through the system will be critical to the NHS's ability to cope with future winter pressures on urgent and emergency care services At a time when NHS budgets are under significant pressure the number of emergency admissions to hospitals is continuing to rise albeit at a slower rate than in the past More patients attending major A E departments are now being admitted to hospital In 2012/13 over a quarter of all patients attending major A E departments were admitted up from 19 per cent in 2003/04 The rise in emergency admissions is dominated by patients who stay less than two days short stay in hospital The main factors behind the increase in emergency admissions include the slowness with which the NHS has developed effective alternatives to admission to hospital There are many local initiatives to prevent avoidable emergency admissions but limited evidence on what works A lack of alignment between hospitals and community and local services in the hours they are open compromises efforts to avoid out of hours hospital admissions and prolongs the length of stay of inpatients Among the NAO's recommendations is the need for both short and long term strategies to address staffing shortages in A E The Department and NHS England should also address barriers to seven day working in hospitals such as the consultants contract which gives consultants the right to refuse to work outside 7am to 7pm Monday to Friday

Accident & Emergency Brian Dolan, Lynda Holt, 2008 This edition shows nurses why they are doing what they do rather than just how for a range of A E conditions It has sections that cover potential problem areas such as paediatrics and treating the mentally ill A E patient A basic A P section is included so even the most experienced nurse can refresh their knowledge
