While some programmes have been designed to assist refugee parents and teachers to meet the needs of youth from refugee backgrounds,<sup>59</sup> there is a dearth of systematic information about how best to facilitate education at this level. Additional challenges arise when their abilities and interactions affect school performance.<sup>60</sup> The supportive role young people take at home and issues related to disrupted education or lack of education in their countries of origin make schooling in Australia challenging.<sup>61</sup> The difficulties of minimal educational background and the pressures of supporting family in Australia and elsewhere make schooling very difficult, decreasing the likelihood of a successful transition
