

Real-World Math Applications

Ms. Washington was a great teacher! Trina couldn't wait for the first day of school. She hoped all summer to have Ms. Washington as her math teacher. And she was thrilled on the first day of school to be in Ms. Washington's homeroom. But that was a couple of months ago. As the days stretched into weeks and the weeks into months, Trina fell behind in math. It seemed that all of the other students in her group were getting it while she struggled.

One day during group practice, Trina expressed her frustration out loud. "I just don't get all of this math stuff. Plus, it's useless. We'll never use this stuff! Math is just a waste of time," Trina said to her group. What Trina didn't know was Ms. Washington was standing behind her. She heard everything Trina said about math. When Trina realized Ms. Washington was standing behind her, she got embarrassed and real quiet. Who could blame her? Math was Ms. Washington's favorite subject.

"Trina," said Ms. Washington in her teacher's voice, "I know you find math challenging and frustrating. But, maybe you need to think about it differently."

Trina replied, "I'm sorry, Ms. Washington. You're just saying that because you are a teacher, and it's your job."

"Alright, Trina. I see you need some convincing! What if I told you that you use math every day and don't know it most times? What do you say to that," said Ms. Washington to Trina.

Trina was skeptical. She rolled her eyes and shrugged her shoulders. Then, finally, Trina said, "You're just saying that to make me feel better."

Ms. Washington, with a smile, replied, "Fair enough! If I can prove that math is used every day, will you try a little harder?"

Trina thought, "Good luck with that." Then, not wanting to get into more trouble, Trina said, "Yes, if you can prove math is used every day, I will try harder."
