confessed as well as their own contribution to the achievements of their predecessors to mechanical skilfulness to utility and to beauty It is the nature and the extent of this contribution which is of vital importance to the student and it is this which lends to architecture its keenest significance What then was the contribution of the first builders of Islam It must be confessed that the question admits of no very striking rejoinder The Mohammedan invaders were essentially nomadic their dwelling was the black tent their grave the desert sands The inhabitants of the rare oases of western and central Arabia were content as they are to day with a rude architecture of sun dried brick and palm trunks unadorned by any intricate device of the imagination and unsuited to any but the simplest needs Even the great national shrine at Mecca the sacred house of the Ka bah was innocent of subsidiary constructions It is true that on the northern trade route the rock cut tombs of Madain Salih and of Petra bear witness to a higher order of artistic impulse but it was an impulse which borrowed its power from without from Hellenized Egypt and from Hellenized Syria If there were an indigenous Arabian architecture worthy of the name it can only have existed in the southern limits of the peninsula where as yet exploration has been too imperfect to afford data for argument nor is there evidence to show that in the seventh century of our era it can have played a part in the development of the northern tribes Upon the northern frontiers the influence of the Byzantine and of the Sasanian empires would seem to have been predominant and when the invaders established themselves in provinces which had been ruled from Constantinople or from Ctesiphon they employed Greek and Persian artificers to fulfil their newly developed requirements and to satisfy their newly developed taste for architectural magnificence About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
