Architecture, Ceremonial, and Power Gülrü Necipoğlu, 1991 Necipoglu demonstrates the palace's role as a vast stage for the enactment of a ceremonial that emphasized the sultan's absolute power and his aloofness from the outside world. In the absence of the monumentality, axiality, and rational geometric planning principles now usually associated with imperial architecture, the author's deciphering of the palace's iconography is all the more revealing.

Late Victorian Orientalism Leonora Sasso, 2020-06-30 Late Victorian Orientalism is a work of scholarly research pushing forward disciplines into new areas of enquiry. This collection of essays tries to redefine the task of interpreting the East in the nineteenth century taking as a starting point Edward Said's Orientalism (1978) in order to investigate the visual fantasised and imperialist representations of the East as well as the most exemplary translations of Oriental texts. The Victorians envisioned the East in many different modes or Orientalisms since, as Said suggested, there were perhaps as many Orientalisms as Orientalists. By combining together Western and Oriental modes of art, this study is not only aimed at filling a gap in Victorian and Oriental studies but also at broadening the audiences it is intended for.

The City's Pleasures Shirine Hamadeh, 2008 The City's Pleasures is the first historical investigation of the tremendous changes that affected the fabric and architecture of Istanbul in the century that followed the decisive return of the Ottoman court to the capital in 1703. These were spectacular times that witnessed the most extraordinary urban expansion and building explosion in the history of the city. Showing how architecture and urban form became involved in the representation and construction of a changing social order, Shirine Hamadeh reassesses the dominance of the paradigm of Westernization in interpretations of this period and challenges the suggestion that change in the eighteenth century could only occur by turning toward a now superior West Drawing on a genre of Ottoman poetry written in celebration of the built environment and on a vast array of related textual and visual sources Hamadeh demonstrates that architectural change was the result of a dynamic synthesis between internal and external factors and closely mirrored the process of cloisonnement of the city's social landscape Examining novel forms spaces and decorative vocabularies changing patterns of patronage and new patterns of architectural perception The City's Pleasures shows how these exposed and reinforced the internal dynamics that were played out between a society in flux and a state anxious to recreate an ideal system of social hierarchies Profoundly hybrid in nature the new architectural idiom reflected a growing permeability between elite and middle class sensibilities an unprecedented degree of receptivity to Western and Eastern foreign traditions and a clear departure from the parameters of the classical canon Innovation became the new operative doctrine As the built environment was experienced perceived and appreciated by contemporary observers it increasingly revealed itself as a perpetual source of sensory pleasures
