Maternal Employment And Childrens Development Longitudinal Research:

Maternal Employment and Children's Development Adele Eskeles Gottfried, Allen W. Gottfried, 2013-11-21 In a review written in 1979 I noted that there was a paucity of research examining the effects of maternal employment on the infant and young child and also that longitudinal studies of the effects of maternal employment were needed Hoffman 1979 In the last 10 years there has been a flurry of research activity focused on the mother's employment during the child's early years and much of this work has been longitudinal All of the studies reported in this volume are at least short term longitudinal studies and most of them examine the effects of maternal employment during the early years The increased focus on maternal employment during infancy is not a response to the mandate of that review but rather reflects the new employment patterns in the United States In March 1985 the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that 49.4% of married women with children less than a year old were employed outside the home Hayghe 1986 This figure is up from 39% in 1980 and more than double the rate in 1970 By now most mothers of children under 3 are in the labor force

First-Year Maternal Employment and

Child Development in the First 7 Years Jeanne Brooks-Gunn, Wen-Jui Han, Jane Waldfogel, 2010-08-24 Using data from the first 2 phases of the NICHD Study of Early Child Care we examine the links between maternal employment in the first 12 months of life and cognitive social and emotional outcomes for children at age 3 at age 4.5 and in first grade Drawing on theory and prior research from developmental psychology as well as economics and sociology we address 3 main questions First what associations exist between 1st year maternal employment and cognitive social and emotional outcomes for children in the first seven years of life Second to what extent do any such associations vary by the child's gender and temperament or the mother's occupation Third to what extent do mother's earnings the home environment maternal depressive symptoms sensitivity and HOME scores and the type and quality of child care mediate or offset any associations between 1st year employment and child outcomes and what is the net effect of 1st year maternal employment once these factors are taken into account We compare families in which mothers worked full time 55% part time 23% or did not work 22% in the first year Our main results pertain to non Hispanic White children N 900 although we also carry out some analyses for a small sample of African American children N 113 Our findings provide new insight as to the net effects of 1st year maternal employment as well as the potential pathways through which associations between 1st year maternal employment and later child outcomes where present come about Our structural equation modeling results indicate that on average the associations between 1st year maternal employment and later cognitive social and emotional outcomes are neutral because negative effects where present are offset by positive effects These results confirm that maternal employment in the 1st year of life may confer both advantages and disadvantages and that for the average non Hispanic White child those effects balance each other

Employed Mothers and Their Children Jacqueline V. Lerner, Nancy L. Galambos, 2021-04-14 In 1969 the author wrote a letter to Science protesting the unfair treatment of academic mothers who were expected to work full time Her problem with balancing work and family life was typical of the problems of most young parents in the United States More than 20 years later the same problems have not been solved even though more than twice as many families are headed by a fully employed parent or parents In this volume the authors survey the many problems of employed parents and their children Documenting problems by sound research and pointing to the future solutions is a valuable contribution to the psychological literature

Maternal Employment, Relative Income, and Child Well-being: The Effects of Gendered Household Resource Allocation on Children's Cognitive Development Trajectories Jeremiah B. Wills, 2007 In this study I extend the scholarship on maternal employment and the allocation of household resources by evaluating the effects of mothers time spent in the labor force and mother relative income on children s cognitive development I use a gendered resource allocation model that recognizes differences in investment preferences between men and women and how women can use increases in their relative earnings to direct greater amounts of family resources towards enrichment goods and services that promote child well being Support for this model comes mostly from research conducted outside of the United States This study contributes to this research literature by using an American sample drawn from the Children of the National Longitudinal Survey of Youth 1979 In addition I contribute to the research on maternal employment and child outcomes with a longitudinal analysis of children s cognitive development trajectories from age five to 14 I find some negative effects on children s initial levels of cognitive skills for measures of both early and current maternal employment hours Some of these effects are moderated by race the supportiveness of children s home environment and mothers cognitive skills Contrary to predictions from a gendered resource allocation model I find that children s cognitive development is lowest in households in which mothers and fathers incomes approximate parity likely because of a lack of clear specialization in such households I discuss these findings in terms of theoretical research and policy applications

From Work-Family Balance to Work-Family Interaction Diane F. Halpern,Susan Elaine Murphy,2013-06-17 This volume will discuss measures of work family conflict policies designed to reduce conflict comparisons with other industrialized nations and reasons why family friendly work policies have not been adopted with enthusiasm

California. Court of Appeal (2nd Appellate District). Records and Briefs California (State)., Received document entitled APPENDIX TO PETITION FOR WRIT Early Maternal Employment and Child Development in Five OECD Countries, 2011 This report investigates the effects of maternal employment on child development It compares data from countries with different types of work family policy Australia Canada Denmark the United Kingdom and the United States using data from national birth cohort studies including the Longitudinal Study of Australian Children LSAC the National Longitudinal Survey of Children and Youth NLSCY from Canada the Danish Longitudinal Survey of Children DALSC the Millennium Cohort Study MCS from the UK and the Early Childhood Longitudinal Study ECLS from the US The report compares children's behavioural and cognitive outcomes the timing and intensity of maternal employment child care arrangements and family characteristics The findings suggest that a return to paid work by mothers within six months after childbirth may have negative effects on child outcomes but the effects are small and not universally observed Other factors such as family income parental education and quality of interaction with children were found to have greater effects on development

study contributes to this research literature by using an American sample drawn from the Children of the National Longitudinal Survey of Youth 1979 In addition I contribute to the research on maternal employment and child outcomes with a longitudinal analysis of children s cognitive development trajectories from age five to 14 I find some negative effects on children s initial levels of cognitive skills for measures of both early and current maternal employment hours Some of these effects are moderated by race the supportiveness of children s home environment and mothers cognitive skills Contrary to predictions from a gendered resource allocation model I find that children s cognitive development is lowest in households in which mothers and fathers incomes approximate parity likely because of a lack of clear specialization in such households I discuss these findings in terms of theoretical research and policy applications

Journal of the American Medical Women's Association American Medical Women's Association,1993 Working Women and Their Families Jacqueline V. Lerner,1994 With so many of today s mothers employed in the workforce this concise volume considers the impact that this dual role has both on the mothers themselves and their children The author examines the complex issue of children s social emotional and intellectual development indicating the various factors which can influence child development including age sex temperament family wealth or poverty father s attitudes and the quality of child care

The Effect of Maternal Employment on Family Well-being Bezawit Teshome Agiro,2018 This dissertation is composed of three essays on the effect of maternal employment on family well being using data from Early Childhood Longitudinal Study Kindergarten Class of 2010 11 ECLS K 2011 In general the findings from this study suggest that the effect of maternal employment on children s weight status and cognitive development is not significant but it is significant on mothers overall health and psychological well being The first essay re examines the effect of maternal employment on child obesity by taking a sample of grade 2 children who had at least one younger sibling from the spring 2013 cohort The study makes use of a bivariate probit model using exogenous variation in youngest sibling s eligibility for kindergarten as an instrument for maternal employment The findings suggest that the effect of maternal employment on child obesity is not significant The results show that rather than maternal employment socio economic status schooling environment and lifestyle behaviors including physical exercise and sedentary behavior are factors contributing to child obesity More specifically higher socio economic status and more physical exercise are negatively related to child obesity while sedentary behavior and free reduced price school meals are positively related to child obesity The second essay is devoted to the analysis of the effect of maternal employment on child cognitive outcome This study uses data from spring 2013 cohort of the Early Childhood Longitudinal Study Kindergarten Class of 2010 11 ECLS K 2011 Using instrumental variable regression the result shows that the effect of maternal employment on children s cognitive development is not significant The quality of schooling as measured by teachers years of experience and class size as well as socio economic status are significant factors influencing children s cognitive outcome Having more experienced teachers and coming from a higher socio economic background contributes positively to children s cognitive outcome while there is some evidence that smaller class size reduces children's scores. The third essay investigates the effect of maternal employment on mothers' overall health and psychological distress. This study makes use of data from the Early Childhood Longitudinal Study Kindergarten Class of 2010-11 ECLS-K 2011 and the U.S. Bureau of Labor statistics. For analysis IV probit regression is used, having state level unemployment rate as an instrument for maternal employment. The findings of this paper suggest that the effect of mothers' weekly work hours on mothers' overall health is positive and significant for the spring third grade cohort. In addition, there is evidence that the effect of maternal employment on mothers' overall health and psychological distress differs by type of occupation. Mothers in managerial, professional, and low supervisory jobs are more likely to be psychologically distressed but also have higher probability of being in good overall health condition compared to mothers in manual jobs.
