Handbook of Nutrition and Pregnancy Carol J. Lammi-Keefe, Sarah C. Couch, Elliot Philipson, 2008-06-01 The Nutrition and Health™ series of books has an overriding mission to provide health professionals with texts that are considered essential because each includes 1 a synthesis of the state of the science 2 timely in depth reviews by the leading resear ers in their respective fields 3 extensive up to date fully annotated reference lists 4 a detailed index 5 relevant tables and figures 6 identification of paradigm shifts and the consequences 7 virtually no overlap of information between chapters but targeted inter chapter referrals 8 suggestions of areas for future research and 9 balanced data driven answers to patient health professionals questions which are based on the totality of evidence rather than the findings of any single study The series volumes are not the outcome of a symposium Rather each editor has the potential to examine a chosen area with a broad perspective both in subject matter as well as in the choice of chapter authors The international perspective especially with regard to public health initiatives is emphasized where appropriate The editors whose trainings are both research and practice oriented have the opportunity to develop a primary objective for their book define the scope and focus and then invite the leading authorities from around the world to be part of their initiative The authors are encouraged to provide an overview of the field discuss their own research and relate the research findings to potential human health consequences

Understanding the causes of anemia is critical to inform appropriate strategies to prevent and treat anemia particularly to reduce the risk of anemia and the burden of disease The strength of this book lies in its cross disciplinary nature This publication summarizes the current state of evidence on the multifactorial causes of anemia with a specific focus on nutritional anemia The chapter authors are leading experts in nutrition and global health The introductory chapters provide an overview of the global burden of anemia prevalence the economic implications and functional consequences of anemia and the significance of these factors to guide policy and programs Subsequent chapters provide current evidence on iron and other micronutrient metabolism and homeostasis in regards to anemia the multifactorial contributors to anemia e g infection and genetics and the interactions between nutrients that may contribute to anemia The summarizing chapters detail program and policy approaches to treat prevent and reduce anemia in the global context Nutritional Anemia is a comprehensive resource for those involved in global health and nutrition policy strategy programming or research and serves as a guide for how government NGO and international agencies can effectively treat prevent and reduce anemia globally

Nutritional Anaemias World Health Organization. Scientific Group on Nutritional Anaemias,1968 Investigations of nutritional anemias of pregnancy made by WHO in India Israel Mexico Poland and Venezuela have shown that the prevalence of anemia in pregnant women ranges from 21% to 80% Iron deficiency was present in 40 99% of these women and has been responsible for the major occurrences of anemia Studies on the absorption of iron from various foods indicated that it is necessary to express dietary iron intake in terms of both total iron intake and its absorbability Loss of body iron occurs in the gastrointestinal tract urine sweat by exfoliation of skin and through blood loss attributed to parasitic infection The optimum dietary requirements of iron when absorbed cover physiological losses and conditions such as growth and pregnancy The total iron demanded during pregnancy is about 900 mg of which 200 mg is lost during and immediately following delivery The iron requirement increases greatly during pregnancy and since the high requirement during the last trimester cannot be met from consumed food the diet must be supplemented by administration of medicinal iron The strengthening of education programs for mothers sanitary measures particularly in rural areas the supplementing of foods with iron by enriching wheat flour and baby foods the supplementing of medicinal iron during pregnancy the daily administration of small amounts of iron to schoolchildren and further studies on nutritional anemias are all means of changing the present nutritional status
