Abstract Pu'er Tea is a popular post-fermented tea and has a variety of health benefits. Many microorganisms, especially lactobacillus, exist and play an important role in the fermentation process of Pu'er tea. In this study, we try to screen some lactobacillus by plate method from the Pu'er tea, and strain C2 with significant cycle isolated from Pu'er tea. 16S rRNA gene sequencing results showed that strain C2 had 99 % sequence similarity to that of the type strain of three Bacillus coagulans (NR 102791.1, CP002472.1, NR 115727.1), and the results show that methyl red test and V&P test were positive. Sugar fermentation test suggested that strain C2 produced acid but not gas, which is identical to B. coagulans. This study confirmed that lactic acid bacteria play a role in Pu'er tea fermentation.

57.1 Introduction

Pu'er tea is a distinctive post-fermented tea produced mainly in Yunnan province, China. Modern clinical medicine has shown that Pu'er tea has a variety of healthcare functions in the human body, like lowering blood pressure, [1] reducing weight, [2] moderating the risk of cancer, [3], and preventing cardiovascular disease [4]. The large leaves of Camellia sinensis (C. sinensis assamica) were used as raw material, and it was further processed by a manufacturing technology called 'pile fermentation'. Complex biological transformations were implemented in this important fermentation process. Pu'er tea is characterized by its unique color, savory flavors, and aroma.
