The Application of Information Integration Theory to Standard

Setting Christopher C. Foster, 2014 Information integration theory IIT is a cognitive psychology theory that is primarily concerned with understanding rater judgments and deriving quantitative values from rater expertise Since standard setting is a process by which subject matter experts are asked to make expert judgment about test content it is an ideal context for the application of information integration theory Information integration theory IIT was proposed by Norman H Anderson a cognitive psychologist It is a cognitive theory that is primarily concerned with how an individual integrates information from two or more stimuli to derive a quantitative value The theory focuses on evaluating the unobservable psychological processes involved in making complex judgments IIT is developed around four interlocking psychological concepts stimulus integration stimulus valuation cognitive algebra and functional measurement Anderson 1981 The current study evaluates how IIT performs in an actual operational standard workshop across three different exams HP storage solutions Excelsior College nursing exam and the Trends for International Math and Science TIMSS exam Each exam has cut scores set using both the modified Angoff method and the IIT method Cut scores are evaluated based on Kane's 2001 framework for evaluating the validity of a cut score by evaluating procedural internal and external sources of validity evidence The procedural validity for both methods was relatively comparable Both methods took approximately about the same amount of time to complete Raters for both methods felt comfortable with the rating systems and expressed confidence in their ratings Internal validity evidence was evaluated through the calculation of reliability coefficients The inter rater reliabilities for both methods were similar However the IIT method provided data to calculate intra rater reliability as well Finally external validity evidence was collected on the TIMSS exam by comparing cut score classifications based on the Angoff and IIT methods to other performance criteria such as teacher expectations of the student In each case the IIT method was either equal or outperformed the Angoff method Overall the current study emphasizes the potential benefits IIT could produce by incorporating the theory into standard setting practice It provided industry standard procedural internal and external validity data as well provided additional information to evaluate raters The study concludes that IIT should be investigated in future research as a potential improvement to current standard setting methods Stevens' Handbook of Experimental Psychology, Methodology in Experimental Psychology John T.
