Scott Forty years ago the Willamette Valley was eager for railroads just as now for automobile highways The navigable river which drains the valley was an easy avenue of transportation but wagon roads leading to the river were difficult and in much of the productive area were impassable in winter and impossible in summer Two lines of railroad reached southward from Portland the one forty eight miles to Saint Joseph on Yamhill River² the other two hundred miles to Roseburg³ in the valley of Umpqua River Wagon road approaches to these steel highways were difficult like those to the river In short agricultural growth was held back by poor means of hauling to market The best remedy then known was construction of iron railroads And the cheapest railroad to build and operate was the narrow gauge 4 i The writer is indebted for matter of this article to Charles N Scott who as receiver of the narrow gauge railroad was its manager in 1885 90 to Richard Koehler who was foremost in management of the property after its acquisition by the Southern Pacific in 1800 to F Beach who was manager in 1878 in the initial stages of the railroad to Joseph Gaston s Centennial History of Oregon the author of which promoted financed and built the first twenty miles in 1878 and especially to the files of The Oregonian the consecutive reading of which has afforded the working materials of this article See history of narrow gauge in The Oregonian January i 188 Oregon
