ABSTRACT

This paper responds to the emerging concerns of residential dissonance character by examining the position and influence of the “life-course” framework of households on residential mobility decisions and the conjunct attainment of subjective well-being in their current and anticipated residential locations. Using data from a cross-sectional survey design and adopting a multi-stage sampling procedure, a comparative study of 397 households from immigrant communities within the Kumasi metropolis is conceptualized. Results from the study revealed contrasting variabilities in the push and pull factors influencing households’ relocation experiences and decisions to move. Also, the likelihood of households relocating over the life course was significantly anchored on the employment stage. Thus, decision-making proxies for households’ relocation intentions, preparedness, and realizing actual moves were noticeably rapid decisions during active employment life. The study further found that the associated perception of attaining subjective well-being attached to a household’s anticipated residential locations was significantly higher than that of their current residence. On the premise of these empirical contributions, the paper outlines how findings could ultimately inform the development of sustainable urban growth management and shape housing mobility planning policies for rapidly growing regions within the global south.

1. Introduction

Urbanization, as discussed by some scholars (e.g., Anas & Rhau, 2006; Piore & Madsen, 2011) is a multidimensional phenomenon (economically, environmentally, sociologically and demographically) that has the potential of either obstructing or promoting the development and growth of places due to the influx of people in urban areas. Theoretically, Cobbins & Endrey-Komatsu \(2015\) assert that urbanization should promote socioeconomic progress and lead to human improvement. In contrast, other scholars argue that it retards socioeconomic progress and interferes with urban efficiency. As Cuthbert et al. \(2004\) indicated, this paradoxical phenomenon affects all nations and is mainly brought on by population expansion, economic development, and infrastructural projects. Currently, one in every five persons globally resides in a city with a population of over one million (United Nations, 2016). The spectacle of this explosive urban growth phenomenon becomes more critical for the future of urban growth management as the World Bank \(2017\) anticipates 2 billion more urban residents to be added to cities by 2045. Underlying the pending stress of this urban multiplicity, the World Bank \(2016\) has advised that developing countries brace themselves for the tripling of their built-up urban areas by some 400,000 square kilometers by 2030 (see Table 7).

Despite the rapidly surging global population phenomena, a critical underlying component that serves as a central puzzle to understanding this spectacle is the decisions of the key actors (zoning policies, households, and firms) on land use, co-location, and transport interaction choice sets. These actors are faced with tough decisions, especially in the urban land use domain, where the premium value of land and rents keep rising considerably. Wardell \(2011\) affirms this assertion to the effect that, essential among the processes underlying the observed structural changes in cities are the location decisions of actors in the urban housing and employment markets. Therefore, understanding the dynamics of residential mobility becomes imperative as residential development stands tall as the leading global driver of land use change with the largest share of all land uses in urban areas (Liu & Robinson, 2016; Poku-Boansi, 2021).

As cities grow and land use and human interactions become more complex, the resultant changes in the spatial structure, land use configuration, and socio-economic attractiveness of cities cause a redistribution of urban households at certain points in time (Okey &

Issues Leo J.G. van Wissen, Pearl A. Dykstra, 2012-12-06 This volume marks the end of an eight year program of research on population issues launched in 1990 by the Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research The NWO Priority Program on Population Issues Initiatives for this program of research were taken over ten years ago by Hans Van Ginkel who became the first program chair and Dirk Van De Kaa The Dutch community of population scientists is deeply indebted to them for their early efforts At the time the program carried the name Between Individual Development and Social Solidarity Population and Society in a Period of Transition The goals of the Priority Program were threefold To reduce the fragmentation of research on population issues to increase collaboration among population researchers with different disciplinary backgrounds and to strengthen the position of population studies in Dutch academe and in international forums Looking back over eight years of programmed research we can safely say that the Priority Program has given an enormous impetus to population research in the Netherlands as this volume attests This program of research could not have been carried out successfully without the valuable contributions and constructive input of a large group of scientists The scope and the focus of the Priority Program were defined by a preparatory committee chaired by Gerard Frinking Trajectories and Imaginaries in Migration

Felicitas Hillmann, Ton van Naerssen, Ernst Spaan, 2018-09-03 This book draws attention to the various factors that characterize migrant flows and mobilities calling into question familiar concepts such as push and pull migration as a life project and sociocultural integration It highlights processes such as flexible migrant routes temporary and return migration mental aspects of migration processes and transnationalism which are organised around the themes of shaping trajectories frictions in space and the migrant mental framework It brings together work from scholars from Europe and beyond with the contributions collected emphasizing the social and mental processes that underpin the migratory process which can be seen as the soft side of migration Too often this side is neglected when the governance of migration is discussed The novel ideas expressed here also help to overcome the mechanistic view of migration as a push pull event Thus the book suggests a different understanding of migration and mobility as relational non linear and fluid social processes characterized by instability in migrant life trajectories Emphasizing the flexibility of migrants and migration and advocating the importance of emotionally charged individual perceptions as central to migrant decision making it will appeal to scholars of sociology anthropology politics and geography with interests in migration and diaspora studies Environment & Planning ,2009

The Internationalization of the Academy Futao Huang,Martin Finkelstein,Michele Rostan,2013-10-25 This volume provides a nuanced empirical assessment of the extent to which the academic profession is internationalized at the beginning of the 21st century It indicates which are the most internationalized academic activities and focuses on specific topics such as physical mobility for study or professional purposes teaching abroad or in another language research collaboration with foreign colleagues and publication and dissemination outside one's native country or in another language It places the main theme in the wider context of the history of higher education's internationalization It provides explanations on what drives and deters academics from international activity and documents some of the consequences that internationalization has on academic work and productivity This study is based on a survey of 25 000 academics working at higher education institutions in 18 countries and Hong Kong on five continents Comparing data from the 1992 Carnegie International study to the 2007 CAP survey relying on respondents' perceptions of change and comparing different academic generations it offers valuable insights on changes in the internationalization of the academy

Log-linear Event History Analysis Jeroen K. Vermunt, 1996 Perspectives in Education ,2007 Log-Linear Models for Event Histories Jeroen K. Vermunt, 1997-05-13 Event history analysis a method for explaining why some people are more likely to experience a particular event transition or change than other people has been useful in the social sciences for studying the processes of social change One of the main difficulties however in using this technique is that often information is partially missing on some of the relevant variables Author Jeroen K Vermunt presents a general approach to these missing data problems in event history analysis that is based on the similarities between log linear hazard and event history models The book begins with a discussion of log linear log rate and modified path models and methods for obtaining maximum likelihood estimates of the parameters of these models Vermunt then shows how to incorporate variables with missing information in log linear models for non response In addition he covers such topics as the main types of hazard models censoring the use of time varying covariates models for competing risks multivariate hazard models and a general approach for dealing with missing data problems including unobserved heterogeneity measurement error in the dependent variable measurement error in the covariate partially missing information on the dependent variable and partially observed covariate values
