Macro and Micro
Approaches

The background of the image features a complex, abstract geometric pattern composed of thick, black, white, and red lines. The pattern is three-dimensional, creating a sense of depth and perspective as if looking down a series of steps or into a labyrinth. The lines are arranged in a repeating, staggered fashion, with some lines being solid and others having a double-line effect.

Residential Relocations and their Consequences Philipp M. Lersch,2013-11-12 Philipp M Lersch shows that residential relocations may change individuals lives for the better but also for the worse depending on their resources restrictions and contextual conditions A comparative analysis of English and German panel data reveals that relocations improve the quality of dwellings on average in both countries but improvements strongly depend on life course stages and economic resources of individuals Only few individuals improve their neighbourhoods when relocating Conditions in the housing market are important determinants of these changes Gender inequality persists in the occupational outcomes of relocations in England and West Germany Due to institutional conditions residential trajectories in England exhibit more variation and a higher risk of changes for the worse than in Germany These innovative findings will inspire further research on the consequences of residential relocations

Tracking Prehistoric Migrations

Jeffery J. Clark, 2001-02-01 This monograph takes a fresh look at migration in light of the recent resurgence of interest in this topic within archaeology The author develops a reliable approach for detecting and assessing the impact of migration based on conceptions of style in anthropology From numerous ethnoarchaeological and ethnohistoric case studies material culture attributes are isolated that tend to be associated only with the groups that produce them Clark uses this approach to evaluate Puebloan migration into the Tonto Basin of east central Arizona during the early Classic period A.D. 1200-1325 focusing on a community that had been developing with substantial Hohokam influence prior to this interval He identifies Puebloan enclaves in the indigenous settlements based on culturally specific differences in the organization of domestic space and in technological styles reflected in wall construction and utilitarian ceramic manufacture Puebloan migration was initially limited in scale resulting in the co-residence of migrants and local groups within a single community Once this co-residence settlement pattern is reconstructed relations between the two groups are examined and the short term and long term impacts of migration are assessed The early Classic period is associated with the appearance of the Salado horizon in the Tonto Basin The results of this research suggest that migration and co-residence was common throughout the basins and valleys in the region defined by the Salado horizon although each local sequence relates a unique story The methodological and theoretical implications of Clark's work extend well beyond the Salado and the Southwest and apply to any situation in which the scale and impact of prehistoric migration are contested

Gradual and sudden environmental changes are resulting in substantial human movement and displacement and the scale of such flows both internal and cross border is expected to rise with unprecedented impacts on lives and livelihoods Despite the potential challenge there has been a lack of strategic thinking about this policy area partly due to a lack of data and empirical research on this topic Adequate planning for and managing environmentally induced migration will be critical for human security The papers in this volume were first presented at the Research Workshop on Migration and the Environment Developing a Global Research Agenda held in Munich Germany in April 2008 One of the key objectives of the Munich workshop was to address the need for more sound empirical research and identify priority areas of research for policy makers in the field of migration and the environment
