Miguel Angel:

Miguel Angel Rios Miguel Angel Ríos, Suzanne Weaver, Victoria Scott, Dallas Museum of Art, 2006 Concentrations 49 Miguel Angel Rios consists of a video triptych A Morir til Death shot from three different angles of a popular Mexican pastime played with spinning tops on a grid called a trompos The five minute video begins with one spinning top but quickly builds into a cacophonous profusion of tops in a single game involving thirty of the most skilled players in town ages fourteen to fifty The installation presents the spinning tops straight on at ground level making them both ominous and startlingly human As these elegant shapes whip across the screen comically careening into one another and violently edging each other out of the picture the dynamics of competition invasion aggression and territorialism are played out both visually and aurally The simplicity of form and color and the grace of the black tops spinning out of control one after the other highlight the arresting beauty of a local game that is universally recognizable

A Psalm for Sonia Martín Anderson, 2024-02-27 Martín Anderson author of My Neighbor Mr Lerner takes us into the world of Sonia Concepción Sonia is a fiercely independent single mother of two who still believes in the tradition and values with which she was raised in Puerto Rico She works hard to raise her son Miguel Angel and daughter Marisol And she will do anything to defend them from the sometimes harsh realities of living in the Puerto Rican Diaspora of Chicago in the late 70s even if this means sacrificing her life or taking the life of one who presents a danger to her children
