The Critical Double Paul Gordon, 1995 Over 25 centuries ago the Greek philosopher and sophist Protagoras equated his famous notion of man with the measure of all things with another that declared on every question there are two opposing answers including this one The purpose of The Critical Double is to demonstrate that this second Protagorean notion constitutes one of the fundamental principles of aesthetic and rhetorical theory This work formulates for the first time a succinct model for the deconstructive analysis of aesthetic discourse While the stated purpose of this work is to redefine a critical methodology its originality lies in its emphasis on the notion of duality or doubling as the essential way to distinguish aesthetic from other forms of discourse The first two chapters on metaphor and rhetoric respectively establish a solid basis for this model for theories of metaphor and rhetoric have almost always been clearly marked by their emphasis on duality The remaining six chapters all develop this model in their respective contexts
