Parent Conferences As A Teaching Strategy:

Parent Conferences as a Teaching Strategy Roger L. Kroth, Richard L. Simpson, 1977 Essential Evidence-Based Teaching Strategies Garry Hornby, Deborah Greaves, 2022-07-18 This book examines evidence based practices that facilitate effective teaching to ensure optimum educational achievement for school age students. It identifies key strategies with extensive research evidence that confirms their effectiveness in improving student outcomes. The book offers guidelines for teachers to use in distinguishing between strategies that are evidence based and those with little or no supporting evidence. It describes common instructional strategies often found in schools despite having little evidence to support their effectiveness. In addition the book identifies eight key evidence based teaching practices that can be directly implemented by classroom teachers. It reviews the theoretical and research base of each of these strategies and provides guidelines for special and general education teachers on how to apply them most effectively with links to video examples of their use in classrooms. The text also examines common barriers to the use of evidence based practices in schools. It explores implications for teacher education focusing on training educators to identify and implement evidence based strategies effectively avoiding those lacking evidence even if they are popular in schools. Essential Evidence Based Teaching Strategies is a must have resource for researchers, professionals and graduate students in educational psychology, child and school psychology and social work who are interested in learning about and implementing effective teaching methods that improve student engagement and academic achievement, strengthen social emotional learning and reduce school dropout rates.

Parent Involvement as an Instructional Strategy Maria C. Paredes, 2011

Families and schools share the monumental responsibility of educating children. Children and parent teacher conferences remain the primary means by which parents and teachers share academic information. Given the limited effectiveness of these conferences a more compelling alternative for home school collaboration on academic matters is warranted. The purpose of this action research study was to examine an alternative approach to parent teacher conferences Academic Parent Teacher Teams (APTT). APTT is a classroom based parent involvement model composed of three 75 minute parent teacher team meetings and an individual 30 minute parent teacher session. Team meetings are highly structured and include six components personally inviting parents by the teacher sharing whole class and individual student data setting 60 day academic goals coaching parents in teaching skills distributing take home practice materials and networking. Quantitative data included pre and post intervention parent surveys and pre and post intervention student scores on high frequency words and oral reading fluency. Qualitative data included field notes from APTT meetings pre and post intervention teacher reflections and teacher parent and student interviews. Findings from this study supported previous research that suggested most parents have high aspirations for their children's academic success. Findings also indicated parents understood their involvement was important to support academic growth. Increased quality and quantity of parent teacher communication and interaction improved parents' ability to support student learning at home. Parents' increased involvement in children's academics was related to teachers' provision of detailed information and training of parents. Qualitative results showed parents' teaching efforts contributed to students' improvement in reading. To understand this outcome, effectual congruence (EC) was offered as an explanation. EC occurred when parents and teachers agreed on an action plan for student achievement when there was a mutual commitment to taking specific actions and when each person's role was clearly defined and implemented. EC became the process that supported achievement growth. These results demonstrated that relationships between parents and teachers are complex. Further, when teachers and parents were fully invested in collaboration, it produced powerful results for students. This study provided critical information for parents, teachers, administrators, and policy makers attempting to implement more effective parent involvement initiatives.

Parent-teacher Conferencing Joseph C. Rotter, Edward H. Robinson, 1982. Effective parent teacher conferences have the potential to be the single most educationally valuable event for the student during the school year. With increased parental involvement in the day to day operation of the schools and greater parental awareness of the educational process, it becomes apparent that educators need to be prepared to respond to renewed parental interest in the education of their children. From both an ethical and a legal perspective, communication between parents and teachers is imperative. However, inappropriate procedures and inadequate skills and knowledge can create greater problems than may have existed before the meeting. This publication is intended to help teachers to improve their parent teacher conferencing skills. First, it examines the historical background and research relating to parent teacher conferences Then it suggests effective ways for teachers to improve their communication skills with parents and to involve parents in the educational personal and social development of their children The core elements of effective conferencing listening perceiving attending responding and initiating are identified and discussed A list of 78 references is appended JD Teaching Students with Moderate/severe Disabilities, Including Autism Elva Durán,1996

Strategies for Addressing Behavior Problems in the Classroom Mary Margaret Kerr,Charles Michael Nelson,2002 For undergraduate and graduate courses in behavior management This practical text provides an in depth look at specific behaviors and the strategies employed for addressing each behavior This revision places school based interventions in the context of positive behavioral support a view embraced by practitioners and supported by research It continues to promote collaboration between other agencies and families along with better coordination of treatment options to create effective services and intervention in education
