Participating Watershed Development Challenges For The Twenty First Century:

Social Participation in Water Governance and Management Kate A. Berry, Eric Mollard, 2010 Social participation in water management and governance recently became a reality in many economies and societies. Yet the dimensions in which power regulation, social equity and democracy building are connected with participation have been only tangentially analyzed for the water sector. Understanding the growing interest in social participation involves appreciating the specificity of the contemporary period within its historic and geographic contexts as well as uncovering larger political, economic and cultural trends of recent decades which frame participatory actions. Within a wide variety of cases presented from around the world, the reader will find critical analyses of participation and an array of political, ecological processes that influence water governance. Sixteen chapters from a diverse group of scholars and practitioners examine water rights definition, hydropower, dam construction, urban river renewal, irrigation organizations, water development, NGOs, river basin management, water policy implementation and judicial decision making in water conflicts. Yet there are commonalities in participatory experiences across this spectrum of water issues. The book's five sections highlight key dimensions of contemporary water management that influence and in turn are influenced by social participation. These sections are participation and indigenous water governance, participation and the dynamics of gender in water management, participation and river basin governance, participation and implementation of water management, and participation and the politics of water governance. Women's Participation in Watershed Development in India J. A. Seeley, 2000 Watershed development has been adopted in India to address land degradation and the need for increased agricultural productivity. Women have tended to be marginalized in watershed development projects because of the focus on land development which given the control of land in many parts of India makes it male focused. We argue that the fact that women are often left out of such projects matters because women play a central role in the management of natural resources. Executive summary Participatory Pathways: People's Participation in Development Initiatives Balakrishnan, Rajiv, 2007 Participatory Pathways People's Participation in Development Initiatives aims to create awareness about the issues that need to be tackled, provide a grassroots perspective of the promise and perils of participatory pathways and a glimpse of the role people's participation can play in building a better world. Covering topics like grassroots governance, gender and ethics, enabling frameworks and participatory planning, this book draws attention to participation's promise while emphasizing the need to take cognizance of the obstacles in the way. Democratic Decentralization Through a Natural Resource Lense Jesse Craig Ribot, Anne M. Larson, 2005 This text includes case studies from Africa, Asia and Latin America which address the management of water, land, forests or pasture.

Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment,2004 Participatory Watershed Development John Farrington,Cathryn Turton,A. J. James,2000 Efforts have long been made in India to improve the management of major watersheds for ecological reasons such as reducing the siltation of reservoirs The management of micro watersheds of around 500 hectares is a more recent focus of policy and has both ecology and livelihoods as itsobjectives Experiments have shown that in some areas more than a doubling of resource productivity can be achieved by careful rehabilitation Many watersheds contain both private and common land It is already clear from a number a efforts led by NGOs that to be equitable and institutionally sustainable the rehabilitation of both common and private lands needs action rooted in strong resource user groups capable of taking decisions ina participatory way and resolving conflict To build up groups in this way requires both time and skills both of which have proved elusive in government projects and programmes The key question addressed in this book is how far the approaches developed by NGOs can be adopted or adapted by the public sector and applied on a wide scale for without such approaches neither the ecological nor the livelihood benefits of watershed rehabilitation will be achieved Journal of Soil and Water Conservation in India ,2008 The Book Review ,2001 Administrative Change ,2003 Forthcoming Books Rose Arny,2000 Economic Rationale, Subsidy, and Cost Sharing for Watershed Projects Amita Shah,2004 In Indian context Southern Economist ,2010 IEG News Institute of Economic Growth (India),2000 Preparing for the Next Generation of Watershed Management Programmes and Projects, Asia ,2005 Incentives for Investing in Check-dams Meera Bhatia,2008 Indian Journal of Soil Conservation ,2006 Management in Government ,2006 Annual Report - Overseas Development Institute Overseas Development Institute (London, England),1999 Agricultural Water Management in Humid Tropics K.
