These lines are primarily red, orange, and yellow, creating a sense of depth and motion as they curve and overlap across the upper half of the page. A few lines in other colors like blue, green, and purple are also visible, adding to the visual complexity.

juxtaposition of interrelated but hitherto isolated fields in the complex and controversial political economy of development. The author brings unique timely insights and formats to bear especially from indigenous Third World activists authors and scholars as well as practitioners. She bridges the local and global the political and the technical. Her book is particularly welcome at the start of the 1990s as a truly radical departure from the diversions and disappointments of orthodox development administration and structural adjustment. Hopefully public policy will not be the same once this text is distributed digested and debated. Timothy W Shaw Dalhousie University Nova Scotia Canada Staudt presents a multifaceted comprehensive analysis with illustrative examples drawn from a wide range of countries a worthwhile contribution to recent literature reporting on and assessing the record of governmentally sponsored developmental efforts with a focus on issues of management and administration. Woven throughout the text are commendable references to persistent deficiencies such as the dearth of participation by women in development activities and the frequency of a feeling of alienation and distance between institutional staff members and the people they should be serving. Another praiseworthy feature is inclusion of many teaching aids such as cases role playing sessions and staggered assignments related to the preparation of individual projects. An outstanding source for bibliographical information about recent literature on development. Practice of Management Development Sara Grant, Aharon Kfir, Stephen A. Stumpf, Mary Anne Watson, 1998-05-21 The workplace is the ideal environment for tying together management theory and practice and yet classes in many regular management development programs are conducted away from the work site and class sizes are so large that individual instruction is difficult to achieve. In this book the authors seek effective ways to merge theory with workplace practice and advocate the modular preceptor method whereby participants work together in dyads and triads with a preceptor acting as advisor and instructor. Unlike traditional management development programs which do not usually lead to behavior changes the modular preceptor model has behavior change as the basic aim. Participants can remain at work while experiencing individualized learning developing problem solving skills and acquiring new knowledge which can be immediately applied to work situations. Various ways of learning such as passive lecture, case study, discussion and experiential role playing games, sensitivity training are examined. No single mode of learning can be comprehensive and adequate for all situations. The authors contend however that experiential learning is most effective for increasing the will and competence to learn and for using what is learned to change manager behavior. The purpose of the modular preceptor approach is not to present answers to specific managerial or organizational problems but to help the participant acquire new problem definition and problem solving skills and the confidence to apply them on the job. This book also analyzes the contribution of the behavioral sciences to the philosophies and techniques behind management instruction and examines the role of the university in management development and the future direction of MBA programs. For anyone concerned with meaningful and effective management development this book is an invaluable resource.
