OFF THE SHACK

Opinions of digital transformation in 2019 by culture around the CIO.

But only 20% of respondents said that senior leaders had shared a vision for digital transformation across their organizations. Why? Several kinds of leaders feel uncomfortable with digital transformation. At least part of the reason comes from the charting the right way forward...

Plotting a straightpath Creating a road map towards digital transformation is challenging. The survey showed impressive alignment around the idea that digital transformation is important — more than 90% of leaders of companies categorized as Disruptive and Transformational, and more than 80% of Conservative-based companies, see leadership in “completely” or “somewhat” alignment.

There is much less alignment when it comes to the road map. Fewer than 20% of respondents in Conservative, Transformational and Disruptive companies thought leadership was completely aligned on a road map (it was less than 10% in Disruptive), compared to a bit over 40% in Disruptive companies. Disruptive and Transformational firms were notably better overall on alignment, but such firms represent only 20% of all companies in the sample.

Developing a road map for digital transformation presents a host of challenges. Because digital transformation takes many forms, first, leaders must decide what to transform first. Does the culture need to change? Is it staff organization? If the business model? Any individual step requires multiple, interconnected actions. It can also require creativity to explain what they think about their business.

For instance, Lantos says recalled when others who are experienced for the company, it should easily begin to transform customer service when it stopped banking on traditional service models like messenger support, self-service, and external selling operations like walk-throughs when bank tellers. In customer service model there's a lot to think. Rebuilding operations when the business is a total change, however, may be a challenge all on its own.

INSTITUTIONAL CHALLENGES

Corporate culture has among the staff reflects a company's history, its people, its beliefs and the individual belief. These are often reflected through several lenses: about generational age, culture norms and culture factors, which are the common issues that affect every aspect of a company, including digital transformation. We will look at three major institutional barriers to change.

Attitudes of older workers Responses in the survey suggest a deep-rooted perception that older people will have trouble adapting. Bill Gitterman of The Small Business School at Babson's Case Center is that, but there's still a perception that older people are technophobic, and older managers don't want to deal with technological changes. “I sincerely think that managers who are over 50 always have some resistance and reluctance when it comes to digitizing business segments, which, according to a younger person,” notes a survey respondent in the construction industry.

Another common perception is that “managers in companies of old people from 50 years and above, they know nothing about technology and its benefits and also don't want to learn.” Another called it management, “Businesses [in the] older's
