

Managing Ocean and Coastal Areas, Ecosystems, and Resources

AUTHOR

Dr. Paul Sandifer<sup>1</sup>

Building on the foundations of improved ocean and coastal governance, new scientific information, and enhanced education presented by William Ruckelshaus and James Coleman elsewhere in this issue, the U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy went further to explore the full breadth of topics included in its charge from Congress. As a result, the Commission's final report includes over 200 recommendations that span the gamut of ocean and coastal issues, ranging from upstream areas to the depths of the sea, from practical problem solving to broad guidance for ocean policy. Central to all these recommendations is the notion that coastal and ocean resources should be managed in a way that reflects the relationships among all ecosystem components, living and nonliving, specifically including humans. Although I focus on specific issues below, the call for an ecosystem-based management approach is echoed throughout the report. (The Commission's definition of ecosystem-based management is discussed further in an article by Adens, Watkins, elsewhere in this issue.)

Conserving and Restoring Coastal Habitat

The diverse habitats that comprise the ocean and coastal environment provide tangible benefits such as filtering pollutants from runoff, buffering coastal communities against the effects of storms, and providing a basis for boosting recreation and tourism industries. These habitats also supply spawning grounds, nurseries, shelter, and food for marine life, including a disproportionately high number of endangered or commercially important species.

As more people come to the coast to live, work, and visit, coastal habitats are increasingly stressed and damaged. Over the past several decades the nation has lost millions of acres of wetlands, seen the destruction of many seagrass and kelp beds, and faced a loss of significant acreage of mangrove forests. Cost-effective conservation and restoration programs should be expanded according to a national strategy that sets goals and priorities, enhances the effectiveness and coordination of individual efforts, and periodically evaluates progress. Many habitat conservation and restoration projects have been successful, but continued progress will depend on sustained funding, improved government leadership and coordination, enhanced scientific research and monitoring, better education and outreach, and solid stakeholder support.

Among other things, the Commission recommends that: (1) a dedicated funding program to support conservation and protection of critical ocean, coastal, and estuarine habitats be created; (2) restoration science, monitoring, and assessment activities be enhanced within the federal government;

(3) regional goals and priorities for habitat protection and restoration be developed working closely with states and other appropriate entities; and (4) a comprehensive wetlands protection framework be developed for the nation.

Guarding People and Property against Natural Hazards

As the recent tsunami in South Asia made all too clear, ocean-related natural disasters can have major impacts on national and global populations and economies. Conservative estimates of damage in the United States from natural hazards, such as storms, hurricanes, flooding, earthquakes, tsunamis, tornadoes, and erosion, put nationwide losses at more than $50 billion a year. This figure includes only direct costs such as those for structural replacement and repair, which some experts believe represent only half or less of the true costs. More accurate figures are unavailable because the United States does not consistently collect and compile such data, let alone focus specifically on losses in coastal areas or on the indirect costs associated with damage to natural environments.

Many federal agencies have explicit operational responsibilities related to hazards management, while others provide technical information or deliver disaster assistance. The nation's lead agencies for natural hazards planning, response, recovery, and mitigation are the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE). These agencies implement programs that specifically target the reduction and management of risks from natural hazards.

He served as Chair of the Commission's Working Group on Stewardship, whose other members included Ann D'Amato, Paul Gaffney, Paul Kelly, and Frank Muller-Kruger. They were assisted by the Commission's Associate Director for Stewardship, Malcolm Williams.
