The Meaning of Management : the Development Needs of Middle Managers in Schools Derek Glover,1998 Effective Management ,1989 A Case Study of the Role of Middle Managers in Organizational Communication in a Secondary School in Hong Kong Choi-Ling Ho,2017-01-26 This dissertation A Case Study of the Role of Middle Managers in Organizational Communication in a Secondary School in Hong Kong by Choi ling Ho was obtained from The University of Hong Kong Pokfulam Hong Kong and is being sold pursuant to Creative Commons Attribution 3 0 Hong Kong License The content of this dissertation has not been altered in any way We have altered the formatting in order to facilitate the ease of printing and reading of the dissertation All rights not granted by the above license are retained by the author Abstract While organizational communication in school management has become vital and complicated along with an increasing emphasis on collaboration and teamwork in lesson preparation and performances in local secondary schools it largely lies on the capability and the role of middle managers such as department heads and committee heads who constitute a layer of management between the senior management team and subordinate classroom teachers Despite that effective communication can be seen as the foundation of modern organizations there are very few local studies on how organizational communication among members of a school management organization in Hong Kong is carried out particularly on the roles of middle managers in schools in the process of organizational communication This study aimed to examine the functional roles of middle managers in a Band One Hong Kong secondary school in the process of organizational communication The research was conducted on members from three sectors of the organizational hierarchy senior managers middle managers and non administrative teachers with reference to previous overseas and local studies in the area of organizational communication and the roles of middle managers The study reported in this paper identified that middle managers generally appeared to fulfil three major functions although which might not be seen as successful by other members namely transmitting bridging and buffering Apart from these desirable functions of middle managers it was found that there was another side of their function some interviewed middle managers reflected that they were the sandwiching class in the school's organizational communication process. Challenges and variables influencing their roles were summarised in this paper. The extent to which the nature and expectations of the role have been clearly and comprehensively defined, the structure of organizational communication as well as middle managers' perception and attitude. The findings of this study will help the school and perhaps other local schools to assess the communicating roles of middle managers and thus to enhance the communication flow within and beyond each organization branch. Moreover, the analysis of the study will provide the school with some groundwork for reviewing the organizational communication structure and offering relevant training for teaching members where applicable.

Leadership Practices of Middle Managers in Selected Secondary Schools in Jamaica

Elaine Constance Luscombe Cunningham, 2017

The study was specifically designed to explore the leadership density in selected secondary schools by examining how leadership at the middle tier is conceived and implemented. This focus was predicated on the increasing demand to acknowledge the layers of leadership that exists in schools. Additionally, there is a growing need to direct attention to this tier by building their leadership capacities as the expectations regarding accountability in the educational system increase. In pursuing this investigation, a qualitative research design was used, and therefore the main data collection tool was in-depth semi-structured interviews. In addition, a ranking activity was done by the respondents as well as observations and review of documents were also included in the data gathering procedures. These tools, while providing rich data, also served an integral function of triangulation. This provision was made possible from respondents drawn from a pool of middle managers in selected secondary schools using purposive sampling. The data revealed that both categories of middle managers saw their roles as very important to the effectiveness of the organization. Their significance was supported by the principals of the schools in which the middle managers operate. While middle managers expressed their understanding of some fundamental leadership practices through the ranking activity, the evidence of alignment in their conversations about their own practices reflected gaps between their beliefs and the description of their practices. The data further revealed that variation was evident in the conceptualization and implementation of leadership practices within and across the schools. Clear identification of a sustained plan for leadership development for the team members led by the middle managers was not easily detected. This was not surprising as it was clear that middle managers were not exposed to a preparation program to transition from classroom teacher to middle manager.
